Yankees Lose World Series Opener to Reds, 5 to 1; Kuhn Orders 3 Walkie-Talkie Observers Banned

By JOSEPH DURSO
Special to The New York Times
CINCINNATI, Oct. 16—America's most popular sport today on the Ohio River was baseball as the Cincinnati Reds' 5-1 victory in bright sunshine on a brisk fall afternoon.

As the curtain-raiser for one of the longest-running shows in sports, the game offered none of the pyrotechnics that had accompanied the Yankees here—no ninth-inning home run, no rampaging by the fans, no sense of civic revival after years of wandering through the wilderness of baseball.

But the fans were surrounded this time by two distinctive symbols of modern sports: walkie-talkie radio dispatches to the Yankee dugout and the appearance of two "free agents" on the mound as the starting pitchers.

At the close, however, neither symbol was still in sight. The Yankees' electronic relationship had been one-sided in favor of the Yankees, but this time the Reds jumped in front in the first inning on a home run by Joe Morgan and moved methodically to a 5-1 victory in bright sunshine on a brisk fall afternoon.

Other details of the game, the box score and related articles are in Section 5.

But the system provided no suggestion for keeping Morgan's home run from slipping over the right-field fence, and before the first inning was over the walkie-talkies were gone. Too, the commissioner, a 6-foot-3-inch Princeton lawyer, reached for his own system—a black telephone in

Top Officers Say Police Protests Have Led to Chaos in Department

By SELWYN RAB
The rowdy protests by off-duty police officers have left the city's police department in disarray from the highest command posts to precinct officers.

Defenders of the Commissioner point out that he has been quietly fighting a battle in behalf of the department and resisting even more drastic cuts by City Hall.

However, a deputy police commissioner, who asked not to be identified, asserted: "Nerves are frayed and most of the top brass are uncertain how to deal with the internal problems that have suddenly developed."

Book Finds 'Boss' Tweed a Much-Maligned Character

By MURRAY SCHUMACH
William M. (Boss) Tweed, for a century the leading symbol of urban corruption, did not rule New York City government; was the victim of illegal procedures at his trial; made important contributions to the city's growth, often showing more vision than the reformers; was persecuted to divert attention from much greater Republican corruption in Washington because he was a champion of immigrants; and may have been the victim of greedy contractors who looted the city treasury, rather than their master.

These are some of the contentions advanced by Prof. Leo Hershkovitz, a history professor at Queens College, and a leading authority on 19th-century New York, who has culled many thousands of forgotten documents for his forthcoming book, "Tweed's New York: Another Look," scheduled for publication this year by Doubleday.

Carter Asks Ford to Stop Making 'Erroneous' Statements About Him

In Telegram, He Responds to Charges He Would Increase Spending and Raise Taxes

By JAMES T. WOOTEN
Special to The New York Times

CINCINNATI, Oct. 16—Jimmy Carter, annoyed by the President's portrayal of him as an irresponsible, big-spending reformer, countered today by releasing the contents of a telegram in which he had asked Mr. Ford to stop making "misleading and erroneous statements" to the American people.

The wire, sent yesterday from Kansas City, repeated the Democratic nominee's familiar defense against Republican charges that his programs would result in an enormous increase in Federal spending, tax increases for people of lower and middle income, and sizable reductions in the country's defense budget.

Mr. Ford and his running mate, Senator Robert J. Dole, have focused much of their language in the last few days on those points, and Mr. Carter, at the urging of his press secretary, Jody Powell, decided yesterday to respond with the telegram.

It said tersely that such charges were false and it concluded with Mr. Carter expressing his confidence that Mr. Ford, "as a man of integrity," would refrain from making such statements in the future.

Comment by Ford
On a stroll through his whistle-stop campaign train in Illinois today, Mr. Ford was asked to comment on Mr. Carter's complaint. The President answered, "He has so many positions, we can't keep them catalogued."

Mr. Ford said in Lincoln, Ill., that he had sent a telegram in reply to Mr. Carter's, saying he would be "delighted to help him clarify his position on important issues."

Mr. Carter told reporters of the wire, sent to the White House, at an early-morning news conference in Kansas City, where he had spent the night after appearing at two Democratic functions and a telegram.

President Asserts Carter Will Say 'Anything Anywhere' to Be Elected

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Oct. 16—President Ford, riding a whistle-stopping campaign train 220 miles through downstate Illinois, said today that Jimmy Carter "will say 'anything anywhere' to be President of the United States" and added, "He shouldn't be President."

Asked by reporters whether he agreed with their assessment that his remarks seemed to constitute one of the roughest assaults on an opponent ever made by an incumbent President, Mr. Ford smiled and said, "I think it was well directed."

In the morning at Joliet and Pontiac, Mr. Ford accused the Democratic candidate of wishing to divide the country, raise its taxes, swell its deficit and weaken its defenses. But he was even more blunt in his discussion of Mr. Carter's character. The President told the crowd in Pontiac that when Mr. Carter is "in New York 'he sounds like Bella Abzug' but in rural Illinois he plays the role 'a little old peanut farmer'."

"He wavers, he wanders, he wiggles and he waffles, and he shouldn't be President of the United States," added Mr. Ford in a burst of alteration used in slightly different form at other stops.

In some cases, Mr. Ford attacked his Democratic rival for positions and statements Mr. Carter has modified, repudiated or—in some cases—never taken.

Mr. Carter himself has sometimes re-

LAG IN U.S. ECONOMY TIED TO WORLD TREND

Slowdown Held Widespread in Most Western Industrial Lands

By PAUL LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Oct. 16—The current slowdown in the nation's economic recovery—which has disconcerted Wall Street and increased the economy's importance as an election issue—is part of an economic deceleration throughout the non-Communist industrialized world.

At this weekend's meeting of the Business Council here, a group of economists from industry and the Government predicted that the slowdown in the United States was about to give way to a steady and sustainable expansion that would last into 1978.

However, the worldwide nature of this current pause also serves as a reminder that no country is in complete control of its own economic destiny and that the future of the American economy is closely bound up with the economic performance of the other major industrial countries.

This is the emerging consensus among economists in the Administration, the International Monetary Fund and the academic community as they pore over the

Crowds in Shanghai Assail Mao's Widow

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Oct. 16—Large dancing crowds carried effigies of Chiang Ching-kuo, Mao Tse-tung's widow, through the streets of Shanghai today amid indications that China's new authorities were preparing a campaign to discredit the so-called leftist leaders.

Diplomats in Peking reported that more than 100,000 people had gathered to see the effigies, and that the demonstrators were shouting slogans against "bourgeois and revisionist" and "those who practice revisionism and factionalism."

Sources in Shanghai, where the leftists came to power during the Cultural Revolution 10 years ago, reported a huge, organized demonstration against Miss Chiang and the three others—Chang Chun-chiao, Wang Hung wen, and Yao Wen-yuan. The four, all members of the

ARAFAT AND ASSAD, BOWING TO SAUDIS, AGREE TO CEASE-FIRE

LEBANON FRONT IS SILENT

Riyadh, Intervening for First Time, Flies the Leader of the P.L.O. to a 6-Nation Arab Meeting

By HENRY TANNER
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Oct. 16—The mountain front between the Syrian Army and the Palestinian guerrillas fell silent early today after three days of savage fighting as both sides bowed to a Saudi Arabian request for a cease-fire.

It was the first time Saudi Arabia has intervened in Lebanon since the war began here 18 months ago.

The request—some Lebanese sources called it an "order"—was transmitted last night to Yasir Arafat, the Palestinian leader, by Brig. Gen. Ali Shayer, the Saudi Arabian military attache here. In Damascus, the request was made personally to President Hafez al-Assad by a Saudi emissary, the sources said.

The Saudis also sent their own plane to get Mr. Arafat safely out of the shrinking area of west Beirut and southern Lebanon that is still under Palestinian control, the sources said.

In Riyadh, President Assad, arriving for a meeting of Arab leaders on the situation in Lebanon, said that he had ordered his troops to cease fire as a goodwill gesture.

Saudi Forcefulness a Surprise
The speed and the forcefulness of the Saudi intervention yesterday surprised observers here. It was in sharp contrast to the cautious and often secretive, indirect approach they have used in the past.

The Saudi plane was believed to have landed at an airstrip near the Palestinian garrison town of Nabatiye, about 40 miles south of Beirut. The only other possibility—a quick, furtive landing at Beirut airport—appeared unlikely. The airport has been closed for the last four months. It is within reach of artillery of right-wing Christian militia forces, some of whose commanders could not be counted on to take orders from Saudi Arabia or anybody else.

The airstrip at Nabatiye is within range of Israeli artillery and has rarely been used, according to Palestinian sources.

Arab diplomats here said that the spectacle of the Syrian Army and Palestinian regulars confronting each other in a bloody battle within sight of Western correspondents and television crews may have jolted the Saudi monarch into action. Like King Faisal, his predecessor, King Khalid regards himself as the ultimate guardian of the Arab cause.

The soldiers who killed each other between Bhamdun and Aleh during the last three days were no longer fighters belonging to private armies or splinter groups. The Palestine Liberation Organization only a few weeks ago acquired full membership in the Arab League, on a par with the member governments. It had only observer status before.

The Palestinians are the immediate beneficiaries of the Saudi intervention. Mr. Arafat had pleaded for it in telephone calls to Riyadh and Cairo.

The Palestinians, although they put up

Threats Made at Transkei Holiday

JOHANNESBURG, Oct. 16 (Reuters)—The chief minister of the Transkei, Chief Kaiser Matanzima, arrived here today to launch the territory's independence celebrations despite rumors of threatened violence against the participants.

In Umata, which will become the capital of the new state after independence on Oct. 26, officials canceled a boxing match scheduled for tonight because of threats against one of the fighters and his family.

Kosana "Happy Boy" Mqazi, South African junior-lightweight champion, and Norman "Pangaman" Sekgapano, South African junior-welterweight champion, were to have met in one of the celebrations' main sporting events.

But Mr. Sekgapano returned to Johannesburg today after receiving threats late last night.

Earlier, the fighter's trainer said there had been rumors in Johannesburg's black township of Soweto that those taking part in the celebrations "would be dealt with." He did not say who was behind the rumors.

South Africa has set aside nine areas in the eastern half of the country for development as separate black homelands. The Transkei is the first to achieve independence.

At Soweto's Dobsouville stadium today, Chief Matanzima told a crowd of 3,000 that he could see no virtue in mobilizing his people into a revolutionary army bent on military confrontation with South Africa.

"Firstly it would be militarily suicidal. Secondly it is quite unacceptable to us morally—we who have been dealt with violently so often in the past have no wish to deal violently with others.

"Lastly it is quite unnecessary—we are getting all we want without a shot being fired," he said.

He said that in a world so "ostensibly concerned with social justice" it was the height of double standards and discrimination to view an independent Transkei any differently from the nearby African countries of Swaziland, Lesotho and Botswana.

International

The fighting in Lebanon stopped after the Syrians and Palestinians agreed to a cease-fire request made by Saudi Arabia. The Saudis sent a plane into the shrinking Palestinian-controlled area near Beirut to bring out Yasir Arafat, the Palestinian leader, to enable him to attend a meeting of Arab leaders in Riyadh. [Page 1, Column 6.]

Evidence mounted in China that the leadership was preparing a major campaign to discredit the country's "leftists" in Shanghai, where the leftists first came to power 10 years ago, a crowd demonstrated against Mao Tse-tung's widow and other leftist leaders, who were arrested. [1:5.]

The conference on Rhodesia was postponed by the British Government. Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland said he was still inviting delegates to meet informally in Geneva next Thursday to discuss a temporary, binational government for Rhodesia, but he was putting off the formal opening until Oct. 28. British officials said the delay was agreed upon after black Rhodesian leaders said they were having trouble forming their delegations. [3:4-6.]

National

Jimmy Carter sent a telegram to President Ford on Friday in which he asked Mr. Ford to stop making "misleading and erroneous statements." The contents of the telegram, released by Mr. Carter in Cincinnati, repeated the Democrats' defense against charges that he wants to raise taxes and weaken the country's defenses. Those charges are false, Mr. Carter said, and he expressed confidence that the President would stop making them. [1:5-6.]

Campaigning in Illinois, President Ford made his most severe attack on Jimmy Carter. Mr. Ford said his Democratic opponent would "say anything anywhere to be President of the United States." The President also said that Mr. Carter wanted to raise taxes, divide the country, swell its deficit and weaken its defenses. [1:4-5.]

The economic slow-down in the United States, according to a pattern of declining non-Communist, in the economists' belt does not necessarily mean that the world is about to recession, but they expected a bit worse than that.

Both claiming victory in the presidential election, Senator Robert Kennedy and Senator Robert Kennedy Jr. announced points out of their exchanges. [2:8.]

The Cincinnati Reds Yankees, 5 to 1, in the World Series opened the game with a system between soon and the dugout; but the Reds were favored to win from Babe Bowie Kuhn. [1:1-3.]

Metrop

Police morale is at a low point because of job performance has been poor and rowdy demonstrators and riotous parades, according to the Police Department office. The problems are high command. Some of the growing resentment is a new wave of corruption.

"Boss" Tweed may be rather than the symbol of corruption he has become, according to a book by Herakowitz of Queens. According to Professor Herakowitz, William Tweed was the victim of his greed; the victim of greedy was not the rise of government. [1:2-4.]

Victorian Era Alive and Well In Old Rhodesia

By HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Oct. 16—“The board is not prudish,” said Allan Wright, Rhodesia’s chief censor. “Nothing shocks the Board of Censors. The Board of Censors are extremely unshockable. We do a lot of laughing at the Board of Censors.”

But when Mr. Wright and his colleagues stop laughing, and despite their failure to be shocked, they censor vigorously to protect Rhodesians from what they think is bad for them and keep Rhodesia perhaps the most Victorian of countries. Politics and sex are their fields of special interest.

Rhodesian bookstores offer as narrow a range as those of the Communist countries. The closest a Rhodesian can come to most works on African politics, much current fiction, some classics, serious works on sex and, of course, erotic or pornographic literature, is the listing of the title in a 62-page catalogue of banned books, periodicals, records and other material from December 1, 1967, to December 31, 1975, published by the Board of Censors.

The catalogue lists not only most books published on Rhodesia’s and South Africa’s race problems and politics but also most writings of African leaders and the literature of American blacks. It bans not only the works of Ernesto Che Guevara and Frantz Fanon but also a Soviet dissident’s memoirs from a prison camp and the lapsed French Communist, Roger Garaudy. Authors who are represented include Sachar-Masoch, President Kenneth D. Kaunda of Zambia, Norman Mailer, C. Wright Mills, Doris Lessing, Timothy Leary, Xavier Hollander, Frank Yerby, Leon Trotsky, Harold Robbins, Jean-Paul Sartre and Mickey Spillane.

From T-Shirts to Underwear

James Joyce’s “Ulysses” is not listed because it was banned before 1967, but he believes it remains banned.

The “etc.” in the catalogue’s title, the censor explained, refers to such miscellany as posters, record covers, dust jackets, T-shirts and underwear.

“T-shirts and ladies’ panties become publications if something is printed on them,” Mr. Wright explained. But he added that he was less strict on panties because they become public only when it was too late to worry about moral standards.

Literary censorship is rigidly enforced, and customs inspectors at Salisbury airport look keenly for copies of magazines with centerfolds. Mr. Wright did not dismiss the possible truth of a report that a recent arrival had had a copy of J. M. Synge’s classic play, “The Playboy of the Western World,” confiscated because of a similarity in title with a magazine. Most public complaints about censorship concern cuts from movies, often leaving viewers puzzled by elimination of sequences necessary to the plot. Mr. Wright said such complaints were unjustified, because in the last year only 95 films were cut and 18 banned. He noted, however, that the numbers were low because no pornographic films ever got as far as Rhodesia and films were often excised by the distributor before submission to him.

Setback Over Nude Scene

The board suffered a setback recently. Mr. Wright said in regret, when its ruling demanding cuts in Peter Shaffer’s play, “Equus,” was upset on appeal. In the staging, the censor noted, the impact of a nude scene was diminished by dim lighting, but he felt the damage had been done.

“This is the sharp end of the wedge,” he said. “We don’t want to go the way America has gone.”

One of the reasons censorship is strict, Mr. Wright, a 56-year-old former magistrate, explained, is that Africans must be protected. He said they had been “extremely moral persons” before they had begun to be corrupted “by the filthy muck in pictorial form pushed out in the guise of European culture.”

“Nudity is absolutely anathema to them even today,” he said.

To explain the rationale of censorship to the public, Mr. Wright said he toured the country regularly to hold seminars open to “mature” persons. Rhodesians said the principal reason for high attendance was that Mr. Wright displayed samples of the magazines and films from which he had protected them.

Mr. Wright said interest reached such a pitch that exhibits had been stolen and he now displayed hard-core magazines only in a binder to prevent further losses.

MUSIC FETE IN MEXICO TO SALUTE PABLO CASALS

Special to The New York Times

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 15—A four-week-long international music festival to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the birth of the late Spanish cellist Pablo Casals begins here tomorrow with a concert in Mexico’s Bellas Artes Palace featuring the violinist Isaac Stern and the soprano Irene Gubrud as soloists.

The festival, known by its Spanish name of Jornadas Internacionales Casals, will bring together conductors and soloists from all over the world and will also mark the birth of a new Pablo Casals Orchestra of Mexico.

The idea of the festival—it is not called a festival since the Casals festival is already held annually in Puerto Rico—stems from a conversation last year between Mexico’s President, Luis Echeverria Alvarez, Pablo Casals’ widow, Marta, and her present husband, the American pianist Eugene Istomin.

Among guest participants at the festival, the London Symphony Orchestra will give four concerts, with its chamber orchestra and wind ensemble each giving one.

The Mexican conductor Eduardo Mata, who is musical director of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, is the festival’s technical director. The conductors Zubin Mehta and Alexander Schneider are among those who will also perform.

The Guarneri String Quartet will give two concerts, as will the trio of the violinist Isaac Stern, the Cellist Leonard Rose and the pianist Eugene Istomin.

CROWDS IN SHANGHAI ASSAIL MAO'S WIDOW

Politburo, were reportedly arrested last week for either disturbing Mao's directives or plotting against China's new party chairman, Hua Kuo-feng.

A crowd said to be in the hundreds of thousands carried effigies of Miss Chiang dangling from a hangman's noose and banners demanding that she be "knocked down." The sources said the demonstration went on all day around the Shanghai party headquarters, with rallies in factories and neighborhood courtyards to explain the latest developments.

Wall posters criticized local officials associated with the leftist leaders. Witnesses said at times the crowds were so large that it was impossible to drive in downtown Shanghai. The scene was reminiscent of the Cultural Revolution, except that this time it was the leftists who were under attack.

The Shanghai demonstration followed the appearance there yesterday of wall posters denouncing the four leaders as a "antiparty plot group."

Analysts considered it significant that the posters and demonstrations seemed to be appearing first in Shanghai, the leftist's power base, because it was a clear sign to the nation that the power had been broken. Mr. Chang is chairman of the Shanghai Revolutionary Committee and both Mr. Wang and Mr. Yao hold important positions on it.

Other posters denouncing the four as "dogs" were put up yesterday at Tsinghua and Peking Universities, which over the last decade have been a stronghold of the leftists.

Leftists Appear Outmaneuvered

Although there has still been no official confirmation that the four leaders have actually been arrested, and no explanation of the charges against them, it seemed certain that they had been outmaneuvered, if not totally routed, by Mr. Hua and his associates.

The turn of events still stunned analysts, though they had long believed that Miss Chiang and her associates were basically unpopular with the majority of Chinese and would be badly weakened without Mao's presence.

The radicals, a generally young group, came to power in the Cultural Revolution because of their backing for Mao's attacks on entrenched power-holders in the party and their support for reforms in education, the economy and the party.

Among other things, the reforms barred bonuses and wage raises for workers, required party officials to spend more time at manual labor and made millions of city youth resettle in the countryside after finishing school.

The radical's evident unpopularity was suggested last April in a gayling demonstration in Peking's Tian An Men Square by 100,000 people who were outraged by the unexplained disappearance of wreaths and flowers honoring the late Prime Minister Chou En lai. Chou was for years the leader of the party's so-called moderates, who put economic growth and orderly administration above ideological campaigns and revolutionary purity.

Other Leftists Reported Ousted

The speed with which Mr. Hua and his allies were moving was indicated by fresh reports from Peking about the other leftists who had apparently either lost their jobs or been arrested. These included:

Chen Hung-pao, who took over last spring when the Minister Chou Jung-hsin was said to have either been dismissed or committed suicide after prolonged criticism as a rightist.

Both the Minister and First Deputy Minister of Culture, An Australian delegation was told five minutes before a dinner it was giving that the Deputy Minister would not attend. His place was taken by another official who was earlier purged in the Cultural Revolution.

The head of Tsinghua University, Chih Chun, a protégé of Miss Chiang, and the leaders of the worker-propaganda team at Tsinghua and Peking Universities, who were active in this year's anti-rightist campaign. They were all reported arrested.

The acting head of the press agency Hsinhua. The director, a moderate, was believed to have been purged last summer.

More Troops in Peking Streets

Diplomats in Peking reported that there were more troops, police and militia on the streets. But the city was calm, as it has been over the last week. The Canton Trade Fair opened smoothly yesterday, and preliminary reports from foreign businessmen said it did not seem to be affected by the events.

Although there had been no direct evidence on the role the army had played, it seemed clear that the senior commanders must have sided with Mr. Hua, a party administrator who has risen from near obscurity in only a few years.

A Hsinhua dispatch said army, navy and air force units that Mao had once inspected all vowed to "rally most closely around the party's Central Committee headed by Comrade Hua Kuo-feng and obey the orders of the party's Central Committee in all actions."

"Any action undermining unity is a crime," the report added. "We must wage resolute struggles against those who practice revisionism and factionalism and engage in intrigues and conspiracies."

Stories circulating in Peking have it that Miss Chiang tried to enlist the Peking military commander, Chen Hsi-lien, but he had informed Mr. Hua. There was also a report that she had then turned to the navy for help.

These stories could not be confirmed. But, one source said, there was evidence that leaves in the navy had been cancelled last week.

Two Soviet Astronauts Correct Course of Their Spacecraft

MOSCOW, Oct. 15 (UPI)—Two astronauts aboard Soyuz 23 corrected their course today, apparently in preparation for a docking with the Salyut 5 scientific laboratory.

Then, the Soviet press agency, said the astronauts were well and their spacecraft was functioning normally on their first full day in space.

The flight commander, Vyacheslav Zudov, 34 years old, and the engineer, Valery Rozhdvestvensky, 37, were in a craft launched late yesterday from the Baikonur launch site in Soviet Central Asia. They are expected to conduct prepared scientific biological and medical experiments when they join up with the orbiting laboratory.

An Anne Klein, of course

Which Avenue? We were thinking of Fifth, where we live. But this is also top echelon excitement on Fashion Avenue (née Seventh). And (with you in it) it's certain to attract admiration on any avenue in any city in the world. Because what could be better for continent-hopping than this all-easy, All-American nonchalance.

We don't have to tell you it's handsome. You've seen our sketch. But we should point out what's prophetic here.

First, this is a Coat-Suit. Not a jacket suit, not a tunic suit, not a blazer suit. You already own those. But you don't have a suit with a full coat that can go beautifully over a closet-full of other clothes. And what a coat! Soft, gray-and-white glen plaid with racy raglan sleeves, back vent, bone buttons. Superb classic tailoring, 280.00.

Underneath, equally dashing new separates. Also gray-and-white. But not matching. (Matching everything is old hat, as you know.)

Our straight trouser skirt in mini-check tweed has a fly front, a back pocket, a back slit, 104.00. And that's not a vest. It's a close-fitting, curved-to-you weskit, in the same plaid as the coat 76.00.

The idea, you see, is that they see a straight, slim silhouette under your free-and-easy coat. A whole new fashion proportion.

Everything for sizes 4 to 14. Everything in pure wool except the cowl-neck slipon. That's cream colored cashmere for s,m,l, 64.00.

Like it? We thought you would. That's why we put this news from the Anne Klein Design Studios in our Fifth Avenue windows this week.

Want to see more? Come to informal modeling in our Studio III tomorrow from 12:30 till 2.

Is Police Officer South of Dublin

Oct. 16 (AP)—An explosion killed a police officer and seriously injured another early today in an ambush they were searching in a about 50 miles southwest.

It was said later that the blast was a result of a booby trap set in retaliation for a decision yesterday that appeared to empower the police to arrest suspected terrorists for as long as 90 days without making charges.

A spokesman said an anonymous source had told the authorities that there were explosives in the house of a man named Mountmellick. The house had a bomb exploded as the door was opened.

The legislation also gives the army the power to make arrests. It is considered part of the Government's plan to deal with the outlawed Irish Republican Army. The legislation also makes it a crime to invite anyone to join or plan I.R.A. attacks. The raids in Northern Ireland continued here in the Republic.

Yasser Mardouh Salem is expected to be sworn in as the Government's vice president at the start of his term. But semi-official sources here have predicted that the Government will ask the Parliament to elect a new President on Oct. 28.

In addition, some Cabinet changes are expected, probably including some of the ministers who deal with Egypt's economy.

Marcos Foes Fail to Sway Voters

Special to The New York Times

MANILA, Oct. 16—An opposition campaign to boycott a referendum that would in effect bolster the martial-law Government of President Ferdinand E. Marcos apparently failed today as the Philippine voters turned out in large numbers.

The Commission on Elections reported tonight that 90 percent of the nation's 27 million eligible voters will have cast their ballots by the time the polls close at noon tomorrow. Voting here is mandatory.

Voters Seem Resigned

The expected affirmative outcome would give Mr. Marcos a legal basis to organize a type of Parliament that he could override any time. In the opinion of legal circles here, it would also result in a life term for the President.

The small but determined opposition, led by a former President, former Senators, retired judges, educators and some members of the clergy had said that the election was rigged and should be boycotted. But the voters apparently heeded the Government's warnings that failure to vote could bring six months jail.

Random interviews with voters in three Manila precincts reflected a fear of risking trouble. "My neighbors advised me to come and vote so I will not be bothered by anyone," said a woman from Quezon City.

Many voters said they did not understand the package of nine Constitutional amendments they were presented with. The amendments had been given little publicity. The voters were also asked if they wanted martial law, instituted in 1973, to continue, and many said they had voted affirmatively because they liked order and stability.

There was a general feeling that it was futile to resist the Government's intensive drive for a "Yes" vote. As an elderly woman from the Paco district said, "What is the use of writing 'no' when the results will be 'yes' anyway?"

Intruding Soviet Jets Driven From Alaska

ANCHORAGE, Alaska, Oct. 15 (AP)—An Air Force F-4 jet was damaged while landing at Galena Air Force Station after intercepting two Soviet jets in United States air space, the Alaskan Air Command said today. The interception occurred late yesterday.

The Air Force said that one of two F-4 fighter-bombers involved in the incident experienced directional control problems while landing at Galena, 350 miles northwest of Anchorage. The plane hit some runway lights, damaging the nose gear. Neither crew member was hurt. The second jet landed routinely.

The jets were sent aloft to identify an unidentified radar signal off the coast of Alaska in the St. Lawrence Island area.

Inauguration to Have Fewer Seats In Congressional Move on Costs

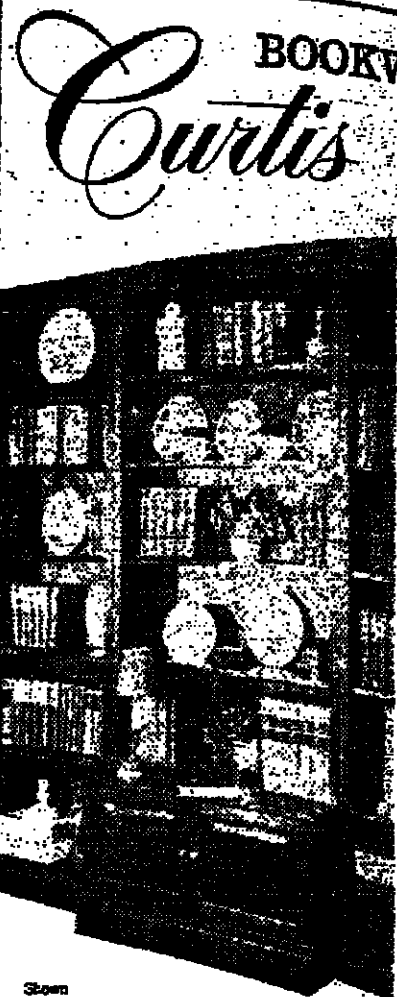

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15 (AP)—In a move to cut costs, there will be fewer seats at the outdoor Presidential inauguration ceremonies on Jan. 20 at the Capitol.

The Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies said that it would also save money by building a smaller grandstand, using some rented seats instead.

There will be 17,500 seats, 1,000 fewer than at President Nixon's inauguration in 1972.

The committee said that the wooden stands and speaker's platform would cost $325,000. That does not include the chair rental or the sound system. The cost four years ago was $489,949.

Language in India: When, Where and Even Whether to Use Language of Old Rulers

WILLIAM BORDERS
 1 to The New York Times
 Oct. 16—The English lan-many people here regard most important things the India, has become the subnational debate among speak it.
 the questions of when and by Indians should use the sional language—in their debates, in their private to their poetry.
 age of our former rulers is an obstacle to progress.

said Syed Muhammed, Minister of State for Law, opening a conference in Jaipur last week on how to go about replacing English as the language of the legal system, with Hindi, the Indian language spoken by the largest number of people.
 The debate about English covers not only the politically charged pros and cons of replacing it with the dozen or so major indigenous languages, but also the philosophical argument about whether Indian poets and novelists who now write in English would do a better job if they wrote in a language that people here really speak—Punjabi, Bengali or whatever.
 Although English is widely used by the elite, as a second language, it is the mother tongue of only a fraction of 1 percent of India's people. Thus it does not grow and change much through the stresses of everyday use in the home or the marketplace, and that, some writers think, makes Indian English stilted.

 "English is not a living language in India," declared a literary critic named Ramlal Agarwal. "Therefore, there is nothing to draw from, and English written by Indians will always be a little too stiff, a little too precise."
 Mr. Agarwal, in a recent magazine article, was commenting on a controversial speech in which Dom Moraes, a well-known author, argued that Indian literature in English was doomed to backwater status because "a colonial literature is always a provincial literature." For example, he said, the slang in Indian English writing often seems forced or dated, including terms that disappeared years ago from what he called "the real English" spoken in London.

 A banker from South India, writing in to agree with Mr. Moraes, put it this way:
 "Indian writing in English is like an elephant dancing in a circus. Elephants can dance, but it will always be a clumsy, ponderous sort of dance. Let us stop making fools of ourselves. Let us realize that excellence in an alien language is beyond us."
 The principal reason that a poet or novelist uses English rather than his native language is to reach a wider audience. But beyond the matter of literature, there are some Indians who feel culturally cheated by the peculiar role of English in this society, by the fact that most of the best newspapers, magazines and non-fiction books are in a language that is almost no one's native language here.

 "It creates an imprecision in my thought processes," said a civil servant whose English is perfect, though his native language is Hindi. "The most subtle or advanced ideas must be expressed in English, because Hindi lacks the words, and yet Hindi is the only language in which I am completely at home."

 Nearly half the people in India, generally in the north, can at least understand Hindi, and the Constitution provides for its eventual adoption as the official language. But the reason this has not happened so far is that the other half of the country, especially the people in the southern states, fear that with Hindi as the official language, the northerners would be even more dominant than they are now.
 "I'd rather stick with English as the common language," said a man in the southern port city of Madras, where the language is Tamil. "I don't feel terribly comfortable in English, but I know that the Hindi-speakers don't either, and that makes us even."

Thai Government Holds at Least 200 Leftists, Including Intellectuals and Politicians over the last two days

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN
Special to The New York Times

BANGKOK, Thailand, Oct. 16—Thailand's military junta said tonight that it was holding at least 200 leftist leaders, including a number of leading intellectuals, writers and politicians.

They were seized over the last two days under a special martial-law directive allowing the police or army to detain people suspected of being "potential dangers to society" for 30 days with no charges and no bail.

At least twice as many people were understood to have been detained and released, at least temporarily, and an even larger number are still being sought by detectives and military officers of the Central Intelligence Division.

Some 500 students out of more than 3,000 detained as a result of the bloody clashes between the police and students the morning of the coup here Oct. 6 are still in custody and most of the rest, released on bail, are still awaiting hearings before military tribunals.

1,000 Curfew Arrests Reported

The civilian police said today that at least 1,000 violators of the 10 P.M.-to-4:30 A.M. curfew were arrested last night, and today the junta asked Bangkok's movie theaters to stop the popular 7 P.M. showings as well as their late-night shows to guard against possible terror attacks.

Meanwhile, a number of leftist leaders who had been trying to flee to Laos have reportedly given up in the face of sharply increased Thai security along the Mekong River border and some returned to Bangkok today.

The seizure of the editors, writers, students and politicians over the last two days has reportedly been done with varying degrees of benevolence or harshness.

Fansak Vinayaratn, the publisher of one of Thailand's leading left-wing weekly magazines, was detained as he was about to board a plane to Hong Kong yesterday afternoon with his wife and two children. Tonight, his wife, Didi, an American citizen whose right to leave Thailand has been revoked by the junta, said that she was allowed to spend much of the day with him in an air-conditioned detention cell at the Central Intelligence Division prison.

Regime Is Infuriated by Report Calling French Gap Between Rich and Poor Greatest in the West

DE H. FARNSWORTH
 The author of a report distributed the French Government that the richest 10 percent of the population absorbs 30.5 percent of the posttax income and the poorest 10 percent is left with only 1.4 percent.

that a formal protest by the French Government to the Paris-based body that monitors economic trends in the industrial democracies was "politically motivated."
 "If they were really challenging the report on academic grounds," Mr. Sawyer said in a telephone interview from his London home this week, "they should have submitted their protest a lot earlier."
 The Sawyer study found that in France the richest 10 percent of the population absorbs 30.5 percent of the posttax income and the poorest 10 percent is left with only 1.4 percent.

The official French view, as explained by Prime Minister Raymond Barre, himself an economist, was that the French data and material from other countries were not really comparable.
 In a formal note to the organization, the French presidential office said that the sources on which the study was based led to false conclusions. The O.E.C.D., the note said, "was fully aware of the fragility of the study, for in a foreword it made clear that the contents were the responsibility of the author and in no way reflected the position of the secretariat of the organization."
 But the French note added, this clarification was insufficient. It called on the organization "to deny all the comments and quotations attributing responsibility for the study to it." The O.E.C.D. has now issued a three-line statement noting that the study did not reflect the secretariat's views.

The furious French reaction was stirred because considerable use was made of an income-distribution study prepared by the political opposition in France. Combined Communist and Socialist forces have pointed to the income gap as a reason to oppose efforts by Prime Minister Barre to check wage increases under a new French austerity program.

Reform efforts by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing have been designed specifically to narrow social inequalities. The goal has also been underscored in a book published this week by Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, called "French Democracy." It has fast become a best seller.
 What amounted to the first production of comparative data on income distribution in O.E.C.D. member countries was published as an "occasional study" by the organization. It noted that the "findings could be of interest and use at a time when issues of income distribution are becoming increasingly important in discussions of economic policy."
 Mr. Sawyer, who worked 15 months at the O.E.C.D. before returning to his university post, said he used official French sources for his data, and on the basis of several statistical methods found that France came out worst.

 The O.E.C.D. publishes its "occasional studies" to permit economists of different countries to report on findings relatively free from the political pressures to which more official reports of the O.E.C.D. are usually subject.
 Many specialists, particularly those in academic quarters, regard the series as among the more valuable works of the 24-nation body, whose members are the countries of Western Europe, North America and the developed areas of Asia.

Bread Strike Frustrates Portuguese

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times

LISBON, Oct. 16—Long lines of angry consumers demanded Government intervention to end a nationwide bread strike that was in its second day today.

"We never went without bread under Salazar," said the wife of a shipyard worker as she surveyed the empty bakeries in the Lisbon suburb of Alges.

The Portuguese, who lived for half a century under a stern dictatorship, are now inclined to blame the first constitutional Government for everything that goes wrong. They do not hide a certain nostalgia for the order and stability of the old days.

Other Strikes Are Feared

The bread strike is the first open challenge by labor to the two-and-a-half-month-old Socialist Government. Breadworkers announced at a meeting today that they would continue the strike "until the Ministry of Labor and the bosses give in."

Some in the Government are fearful that if it yields to the breadworkers' union over what is generally considered a "just" strike a wave of strikes will follow in others sectors. It is believed the country cannot afford widespread labor unrest at a time when it is trying to attract new investments, raise productivity and put the economy back on its feet.

The breadworkers' union is demanding higher salaries and fixed daytime hours. Many bakery workers now earn only $140 dollars a month, barely the minimum wage. The union has asked for increases to between $230 and $300 a month.

The industry says it cannot raise wages without an increase in bread prices. But the Socialist Government, facing local elections in December, is reluctant to risk such a widely unpopular measure.

Reports said that 85 percent of the country's breadworkers were observing the strike. The unions agreed to allow bakeries supplying hospitals and prisons to continue work.

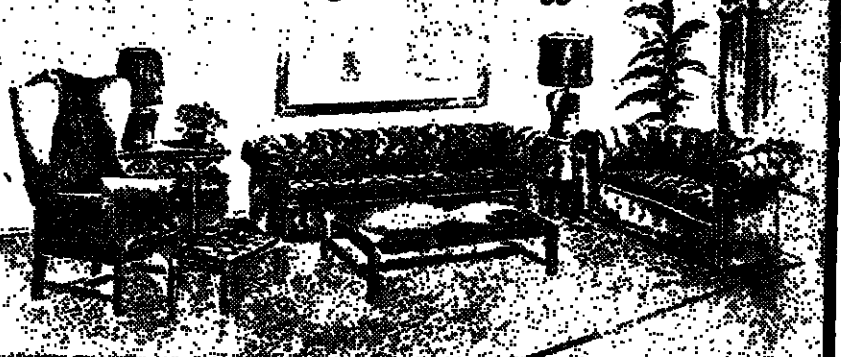

Several incidents have been reported during the strike. A bakery owner in Monte de Caparica shot and wounded three workers protesting the hiring of outsiders. Several towns reported "invasions" of bakeries.

CUTBACKS BY BRITAIN DISTURB NATO ALLIES

Projected Reduction in Military Outlays Raises Doubt on Nation's Ability to Meet Commitments

By DREW MIDDLETON

LONDON—A projected additional cut in British defense expenditures has prompted some senior officials of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to question whether Britain would be able to fulfill its basic military commitments in a conflict with the Soviet Union.

Those commitments include not only the stationing of professional army and air force units in West Germany but the security of Britain and the surrounding waters. From NATO's standpoint the island would be invaluable in war as a base and as a staging area for United States reinforcements.

Political and military authorities here deny that a new reduction of approximately $166 million will impair the combat efficiency of British forces. The cut is the consequence of a general economic malaise that includes not only the present weakness of the pound but a fall of 1.6 percent in gross national product in 1975.

These sources insist that the new reduction will not affect any major weapons procurement programs or combat personnel strength. They do predict a cut in overseas civilian workers and a rearrangement of the research and development organization that will reduce the number of centers from 25 to 12.

Cuts Announced Previously for '78 and '79 Senior NATO officials, however, point out that last February the Government announced reductions in defense spending over the years 1978 and 1979 amounting to $396 million. Those reductions would involve the loss of 36,000 servicemen, 40,000 civilians and 13,000 men and women directly employed in defense industry.

How, critics on the Continent ask, is $166 million more to be wrung out of the defense structure without impairing Britain's ability to carry out its roles in Europe and in and around the British Isles?

Some reductions in forces have resulted from Britain's abandonment of its role as a world power. The Royal Air Force transport force has been cut in half and the helicopter squadron in Singapore has been disbanded. The Near East Air Force, based on Cyprus, has been eliminated and the residual forces in that area now form part of the Strike Command.

Many officers discussing the effect of the cuts appear to be making a virtue out of a necessity. They rationalize future reductions in the helicopter force by arguing that the United States has exaggerated the helicopter's effectiveness in a possible European war.

Air Force to Get New Planes

The ability to fly a parachute battalion from Britain to the Continent in Puma helicopters is dismissed with the comment that it would be faster and cheaper to send the unit by ordinary routes.

The contention of British officials that reductions will not affect first-line combat strength rests on current and future deployment of some major weapons.

The Royal Air Force, which has about 500 combat aircraft, will receive the Tornado, a multi-role plane, to reinforce the Jaguar close support aircraft and the American Phantom F-4's now in service. The Jaguars are receiving laser ranging equipment.

The navy has two large antisubmarine vessels on order and construction of a third is under consideration. These vessels, originally called through-deck cruisers, are small aircraft carriers that can accommodate both antisubmarine helicopters and VTOL—vertical takeoff and landing—Harriers, a fixed-wing aircraft.

Two new guided missile destroyers have joined the fleet and the construction of four more is under consideration. Eight old Leander-class frigates are being modernized. Four of the new Type 21 frigates entered service this year and the first Type 22, which will carry both Seawolf and Exocet missiles, is under construction with the hope that two more will be ordered.

Submarine Force to Be Strengthened

Current plans call for a total of 16 nuclear-powered attack submarines, which are to be fitted with the American Harpoon guided missile. The navy's four nuclear-powered ballistic missile submarines, each armed with 16 missiles, represent Britain's strategic nuclear strength.

Many NATO officers regard the British Army in Germany, with a strength of 55,000, as the most efficient force on the central front in Europe. However, the Army of the Rhine has been short of modern anti-aircraft and anti-aircraft missiles, a deficiency that is now being made up quantitatively if not qualitatively.

The American Lance tactical nuclear missile is now replacing the older Honest John, also American. The Lance has three times the range of the older weapon.

Critics in the alliance's headquarters in Brussels, while conceding the importance of these reinforcements in weaponry, continue to worry whether, after further cuts that they regard as inevitable, Britain will be able to provide reinforcements for NATO's northern front.

Since Norway and Denmark joined the alliance, war plans have called for strong British reinforcement of those two members in the event of hostilities with the Soviet Union. But intelligence officers estimate that Soviet surface ships in the Eastern Atlantic outnumber NATO's by 2 to 1 and that the Russians also hold a significant advantage in numbers of submarines and combat aircraft, which would make such reinforcement difficult.

Health Agency Says New Drugs Appear No Better Than the Old

Special to The New York Times

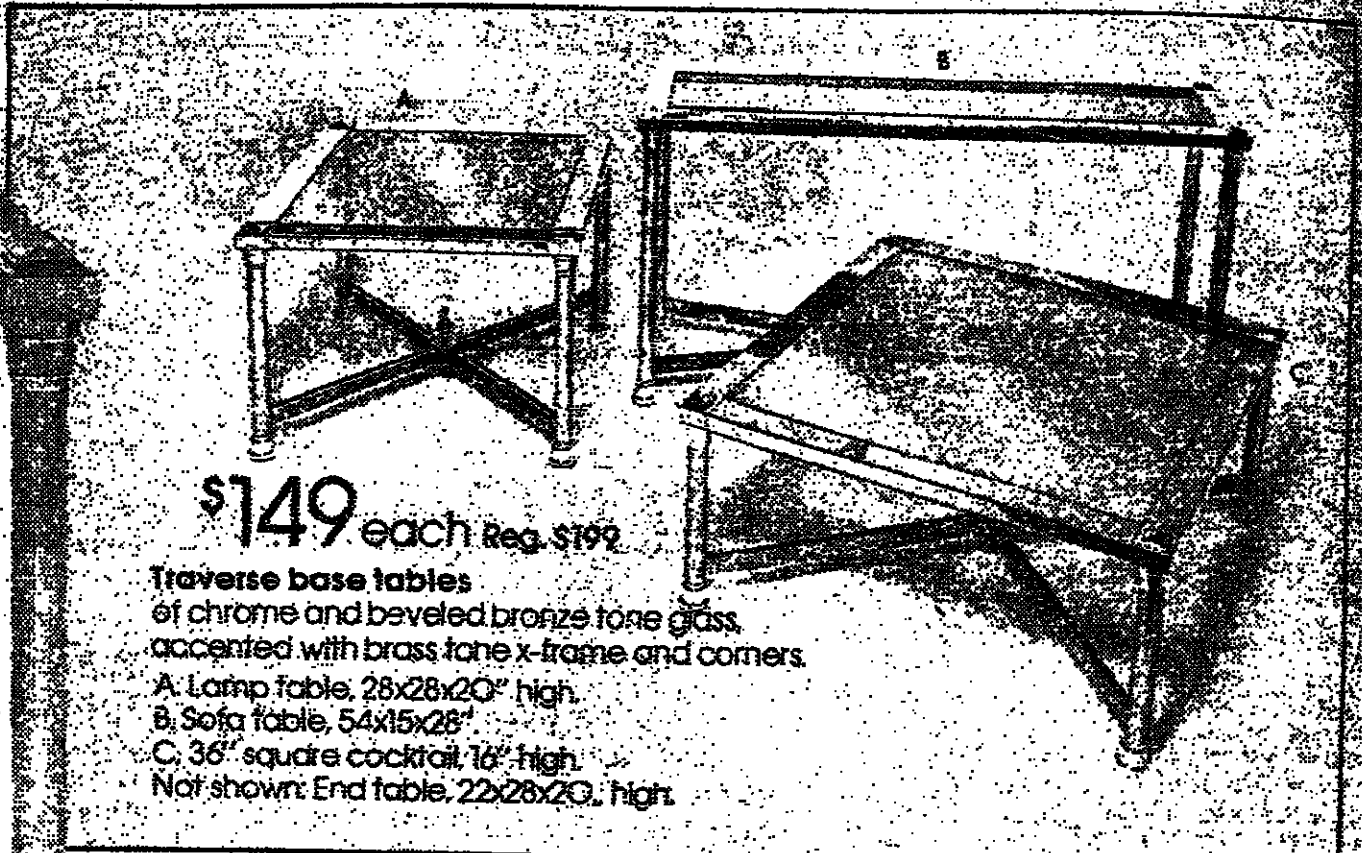

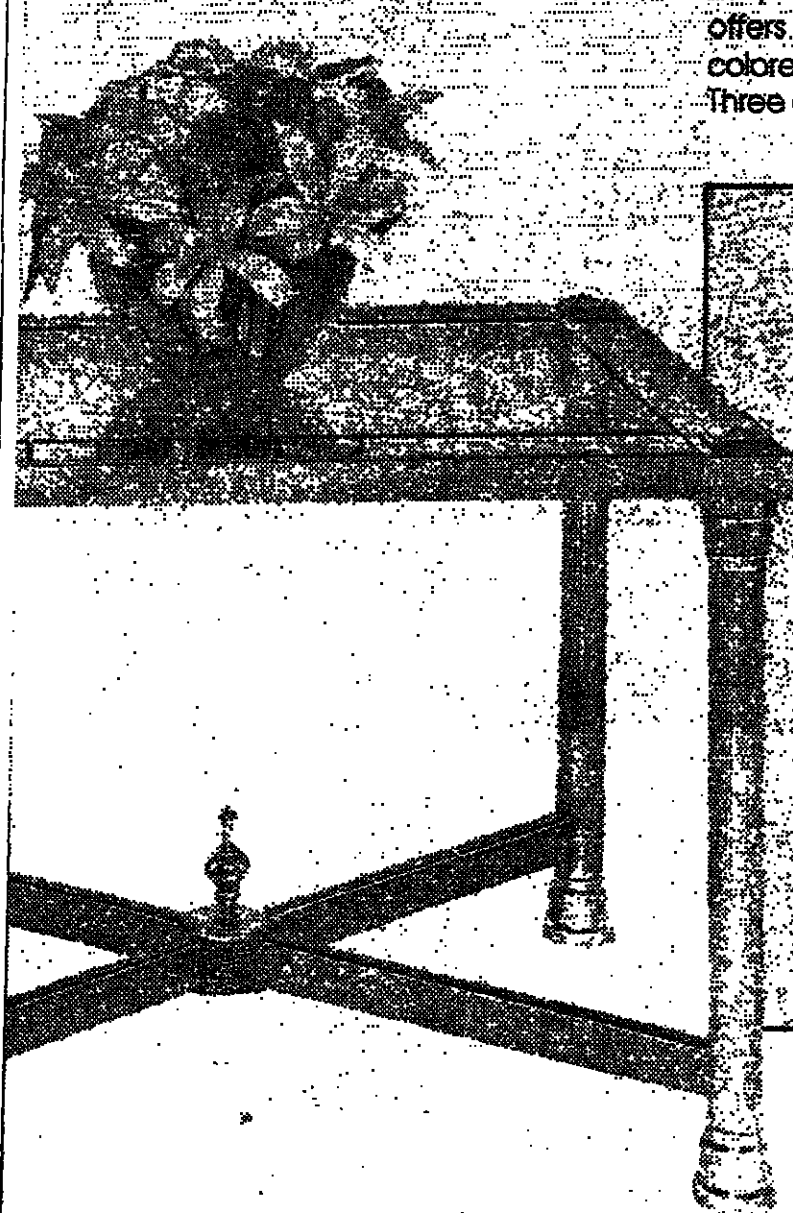

GENEVA, Oct. 16—The World Health Organization has said that most new products marketed by the pharmaceutical industry are apparently no better than drugs developed earlier and already of proved value.

Many excellent basic drugs are now available because of the past success of the industry in developing new products, the organization said at a meeting it had convened here.

"Some important therapeutic gain is to be made," it said, but it emphasized that the "majority of new products introduced today appear to duplicate already available and well-established agents."

SIX CUBAN REFUGEES HELD IN A SLAYING IN MIAMI

MIAMI, Oct. 15 (UPI)—A special squad of Dade County homicide detectives investigating Cuban terrorist activities arrested six Cuban refugees yesterday on charges connected with the killing of a fellow exile who had advocated coexistence with Cuba.

Two other Cuban exiles, accused of being the triggermen in the Feb. 21, 1975, slaying of Luciano Nieves in a hospital parking lot, were identified as fugitives still being sought.

Those arrested were Jose Patricio, 29 years old; Hector Carbonell, 36, owner of a beauty salon; Enrico Velasco, 53, a jeweler; Jose Elias Nazin, 56; Guido Carrillo, 34, and Vienbenido Rosaro Lozano. All but Mr. Lozano were charged with conspiracy to commit murder. Mr. Lozano, Mr. Carbonell and Mr. Velasco were charged with being accessories after the fact of murder.

Jesus Lazo, 30, and Valentin Hernandez, 44, were indicted Sept. 29 as the men who killed Mr. Nieves. The police have been unable to find them yet. They are charged with first-degree murder and with conspiracy to murder.

All eight men were members of a Miami-based terrorist organization calling itself the Pragmatistas, the police said.

The arrests were the first breaks in the investigations of at least six murders of prominent Cuban exiles in the Miami area in the last three years.

Mr. Nieves, a former captain in Premier Fidel Castro's rebel army, was killed three days after announcing that he intended to return to Cuba and challenge Mr. Castro in an election.

PALESTINIANS LOSE PREVALENCE IN THE U.N.

Lebanon and Focus on African Africa Relegate Palestine to Background

PETER GROSE
1976 The New York Times
ALBANY, N.Y., Oct. 16— of spectacular prominence in the United Nations two years ago, the Palestine Liberation Organization has faded in world councils.

As this more starkly demonstrated in the hurried consultations of the General Assembly hall when the decision was made to place the Palestinian observer delegation on the rostrum at the last debate.

The organization's representative, Yasser Arafat, had sought to address the session in reply to charges against the P.L.O. in the weeks of general debate, a session in which 126 speakers representing 120 nations from around the world gave no mention to the Palestinian cause.

Contrast to the two previous sessions in which Arafat had been a central figure. In the first, he had been elected to the Security Council. In the second, he had been elected to the General Assembly.

Particular reason may be the fact that the General Assembly has been preoccupied with the problems of Africa. This seems to have relegated the Palestinian cause to the more immediate concerns of their African allies.

Two years ago, on Nov. 13, Yasser Arafat, the Palestinian leader, triumphantly addressed the General Assembly before the United States. He was elected to a seat on the Security Council. His speech clearly the high water mark of the P.L.O. in the United Nations.

Counting troubles in Lebanon, the Arab world, and the P.L.O. in the Arab world, the P.L.O. representative became what seemed like an outcast to many Arabs.

Right of Reply Allowed
The right of reply was conveyed early in the session by the President of the General Assembly, Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe, giving him the confidence to allow the Palestinian attempts to take the floor.

But the P.L.O. was not allowed to reply to any speeches that were made before the Foreign Minister, Yigal Allon, who carefully avoided any reference to the Palestinians.

Reference was intended by the P.L.O. representative of the Arab League Government, as he sought to bring attention to the P.L.O. activities in the Middle East.

Area Rose to 2d Place on Per Capita Income List

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16 (AP)—Workers in the Alaska region became the highest paid in the nation in government reports. Per capita income for the area was up 22.9 per cent. It is 14th among metropolitan areas.

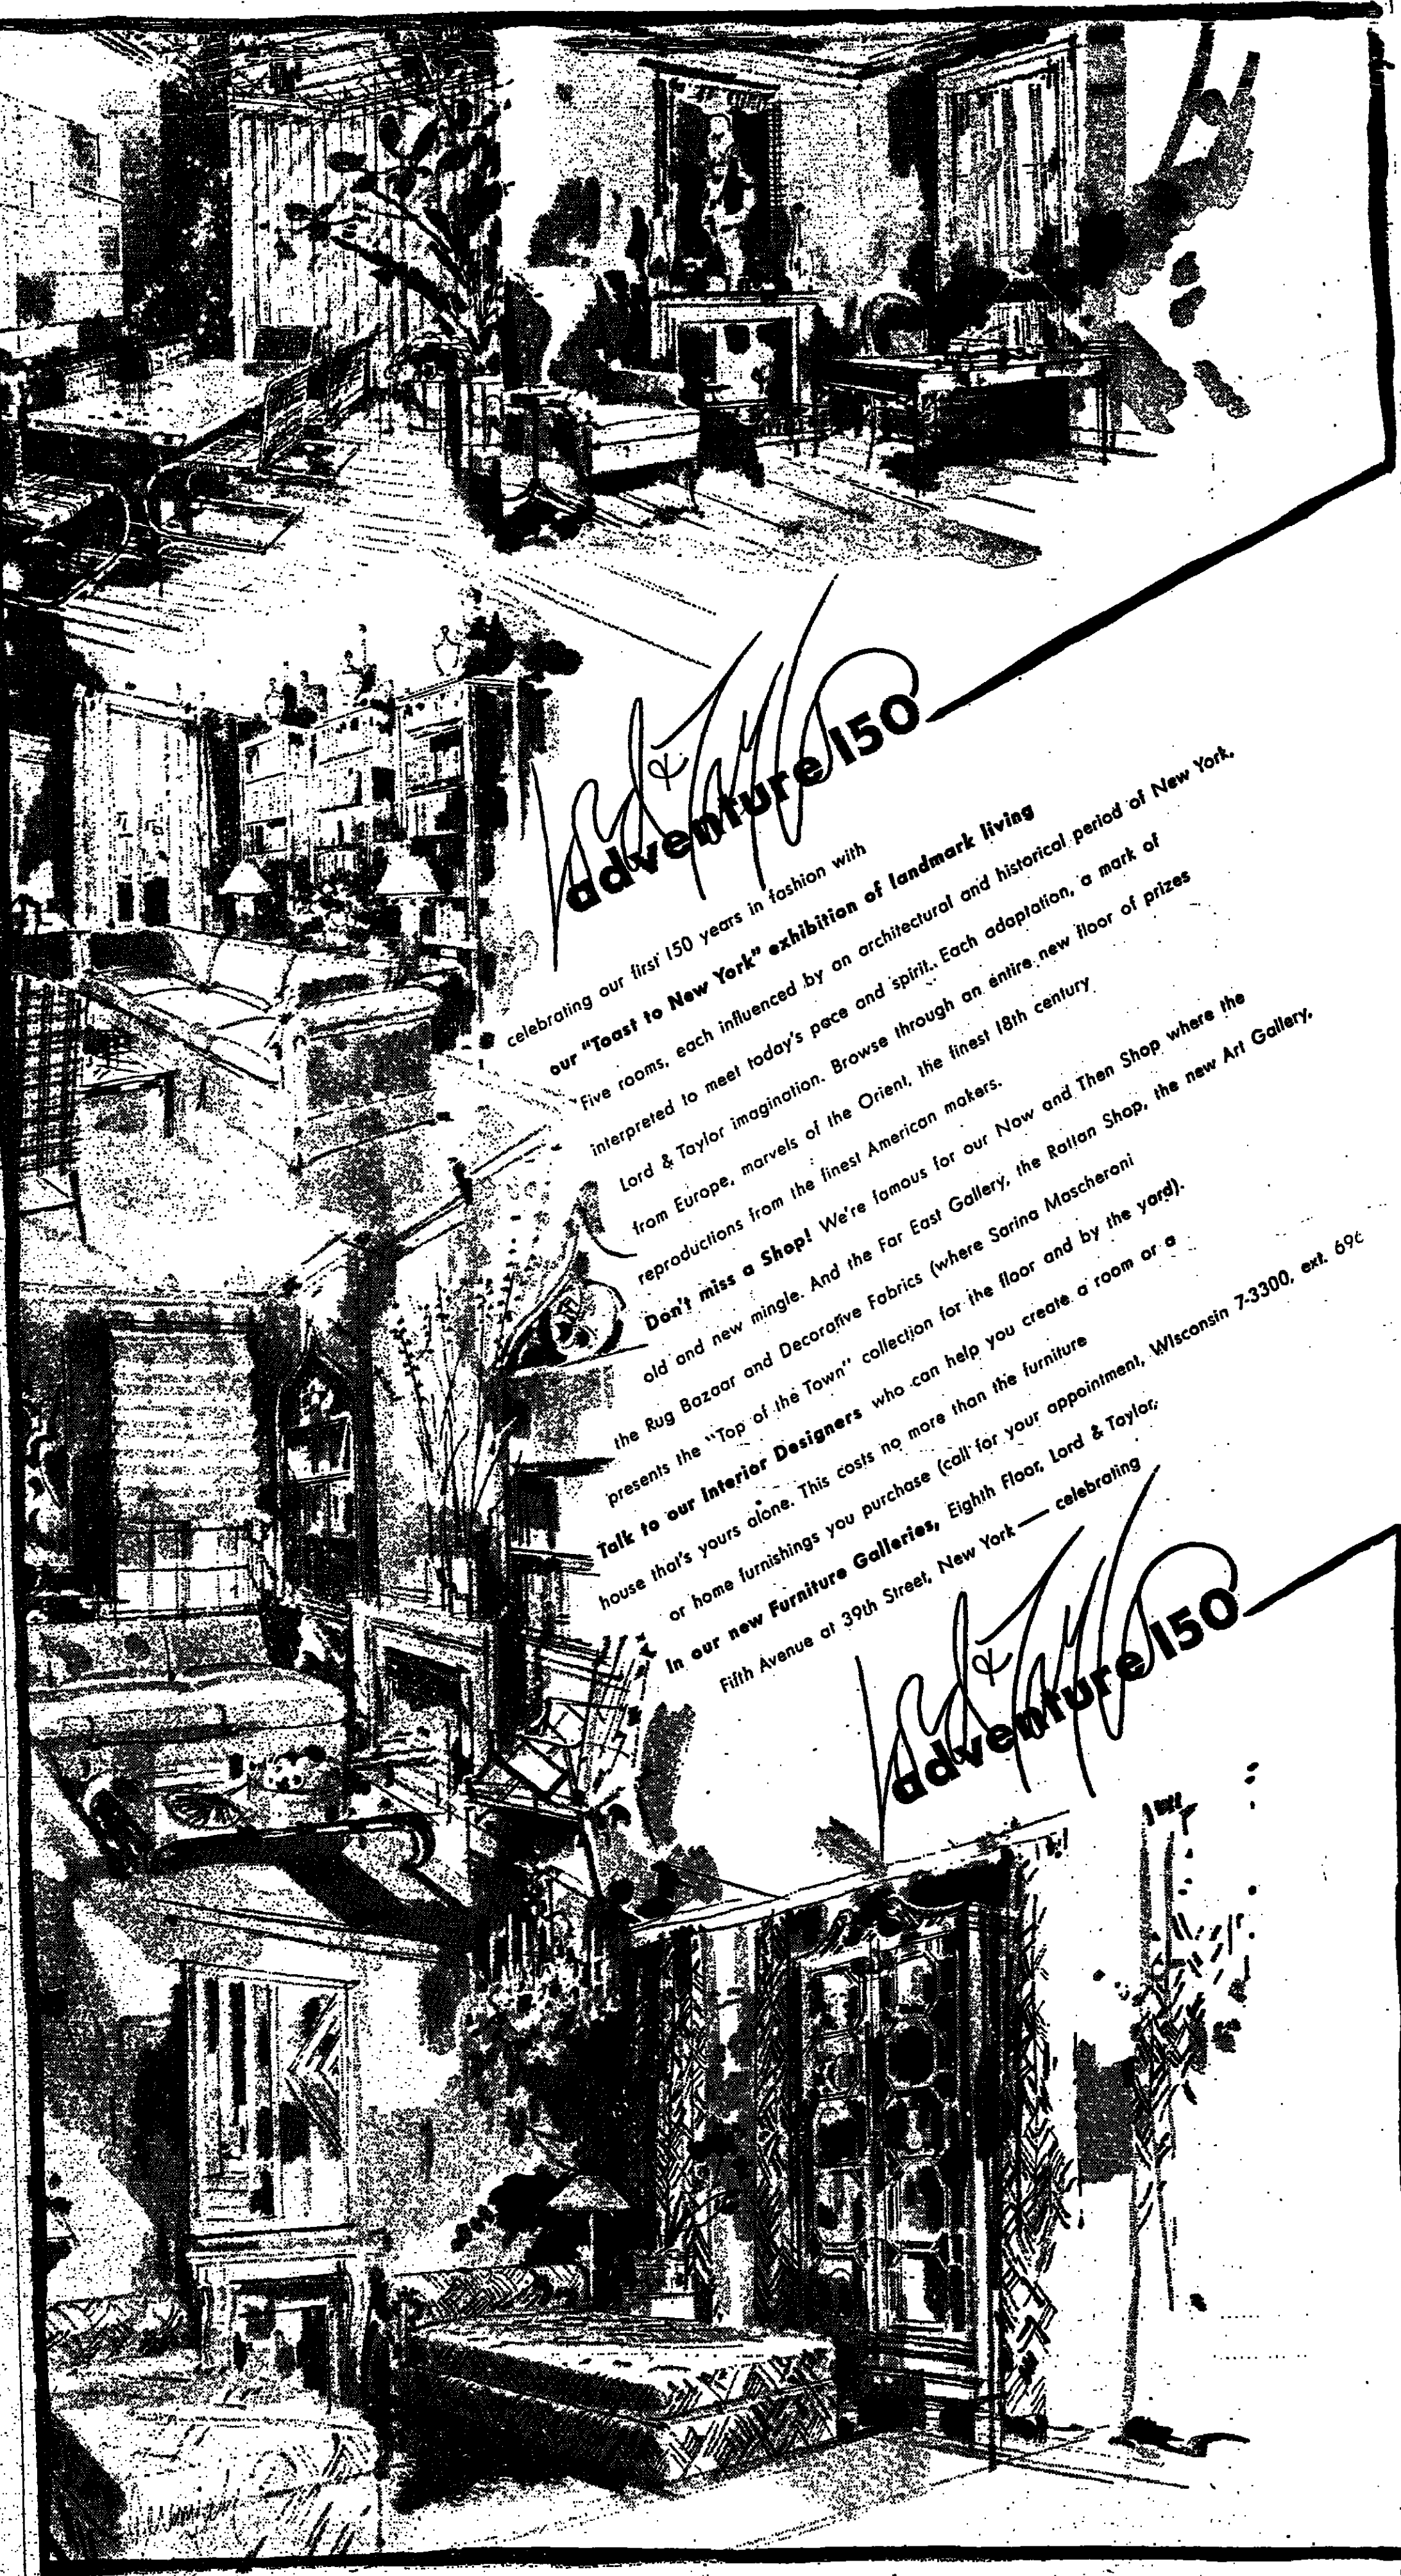

The Commerce Department offered no explanation for the surge, but it apparently partly reflected the construction work on the pipeline.

The Stamford-Norwalk area of Connecticut remained the metropolitan area with a per capita income of $7,781, an increase of 4.8 per cent.

The Los Angeles area had the lowest per capita income, at $5,750, a decrease of 1.1 per cent.

The New York area had a per capita income of $7,100, an increase of 1.1 per cent.

The Washington area had a per capita income of $7,000, an increase of 1.1 per cent.

U.S. Ties Cuban Exiles to Jet Blasts

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16—American authorities said today they had established a link between Cuban exiles suspected of having caused the explosion that led to the crash of a Cuban airliner off Barbados on Oct. 6 and the incident July 9 in which a bomb exploded in a Cuban plane at a Jamaican airport.

They said Hernan Ricardo, who is now in detention in Trinidad on suspicion of involvement in the Oct. 6 crash, which killed 78 people, had been on the Cuban airliner that was damaged at Kingston, Jamaica, when a bomb went off in its luggage compartment.

Mr. Ricardo and a companion, Freddy Lugo, were arrested on Oct. 7 in Trinidad. It was reported that they had boarded a Cuban airliner there on Oct. 6, got off at Barbados and returned the same day without luggage to Trinidad. Barbados has asked that they be extradited from Trinidad for trial.

The United States officials said Mr. Ricardo and Mr. Lugo had told Trinidadian authorities they worked for a concern in Venezuela, called Commercial Industrial Investigations, that is staffed by Cuban exiles.

Linked to Exiles' Concern

Yesterday security police in Caracas arrested five of the concern's associates—including its head, Luis Posada—on suspicion of involvement in the Barbados case. The others were identified as Orlando Bosch, Oleg Guston Rodriguez, Celsa Toledo and Francisco Nunez.

The American authorities said Mr. Bosch was wanted for questioning by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the case of the bombing Sept. 21 in Washington in which Orlando Letelier, the former Chilean Foreign Minister, was killed.

Left-Wing Party Gains in Trinidad and Tobago as a Counterweight to Government's Centrist Policies

OF SPAIN, Trinidad and Tobago (TTP)—in the last few months, Trinidad and Tobago has dissolved its ties to the British crown, become a new constitution, become a republic and acquired its first viable left-wing party.

Prime Minister Eric Williams, who is fifth five-year term in the election Sept. 13, continues to be the only government independent Trinidad has ever had.

People's National Movement won 36 seats in the House of Representatives in the September election for a third majority, and, to the surprise of many, the Democratic Action Congress, a major opposition party, won only two seats.

The most significant development appeared to be the emergence of the Marxist-Leninist United Labor Front, a worker-oriented party led by militant trade unionists, among them, Raffique Shah, an ex-Army lieutenant and one of the leaders of the unsuccessful 1970 army revolt against Prime Minister Williams.

The Labor Front won 10 Senate seats in last month's election to create an effective opposition and promise a counterweight to Mr. Williams's, centrist policies.

Meanwhile, officials here predict that revenue from the country's all-important oil industry will top $3.5 billion over the next five years, a figure that appears sure to maintain Trinidad's position as the regional "big brother."

Trinidad and Tobago, a two-island nation of slightly over a million people, few miles off the coast of Venezuela, has reached that position in Caribbean affairs despite some difficult years.

In 1970 black power militants and rebellious army units nearly toppled the Williams Government with a series of riots and violent demonstrations protesting foreign domination of the island's economic life.

Mr. Williams, a history professor who graduated first in his class at Oxford University, and most of Trinidad's other high officials are black, but there the rebels charged they were "puppets" of white business interests.

Mr. Williams defused the crisis by imposing stringent martial law measures, but the bitterness spawned by the unrest carried over to the general elections of 1971 when major opposition parties boycotted the campaign and handed all 38 of Trinidad's House of Representatives seats to the People's National Movement.

The political dissatisfaction was accompanied by an economic downturn that reached a low point in mid-1973 when net foreign exchange reserves stood at a paltry $28 million. Redemption, however, came from the Arabs.

Government planners here have acknowledged that the 1973 energy crisis and Arab oil embargo saved the Trinidadian economy from ruin. Exchange reserves leaped to $640 million within a year and by February 1976 had reached an all-time high of $850 million.

The attractive economic picture gave an edge to Mr. Williams when campaigning for 1976 general elections began. The race was contested by 11 parties.

Various opposition parties charged the Government with responsibility for a high unemployment, inefficient public services and corruption, but all were united in their opposition to the way the People's National Movement pushed Trinidad's new republican constitution through in August.

The constitution, the culmination of a five-year reform project, officially ended Trinidad's ties to the British monarchy and provided for the replacement of Lord Don's appointed governor-general with an elected figurehead president.

YANKEES LOSE, 5-1 IN SERIES OPENER

his box behind the Cincinnati dugout—and ordered the Yankees to play ball without mechanical advantage. "I'm not here for petty stuff like walkie-talkies," said Sparky Anderson, manager of the Reds, as the dispute escalated after the game. "I'm here to play the World Series." And Johnny Bench, the Cincinnati catcher, observed with a grasp of modern history. "On my CB, I start with breaker 1-9 [the Citizens Band channel, where truck drivers start, too]." The battle of the airwaves broke out after the Yankees had received permission to station one walkie-talkie man in an open seat upstairs in the stadium. Instead, they were caught with three radio spies operating from the enclosed press-television level behind home plate. And they were ruled off the air. On the great artificial turf below, meanwhile the game was opening. Since the first Series in 1903, teams had played with nine men on a side. Four years ago the American League won permission to use 10, the 10th man being the designated hitter who went to bat for the pitcher. The idea was to add clout to the game, which presumably had become old-fashioned and lacked action when contrasted with modern professional football.

During those four years the dh in the lineup has batted 356 collectively, 64 fewer points than Morgan hit for Cincinnati this year. But Commissioner Kuhn, a busy man this year with legal hassles, free agents and $10 million lawsuits, cast the tiebreaking vote that extended the 10th-man rule to the World Series on an alternate-year basis. Little history was made by either of the pioneers who started the game as dh's. The Yankees did get a little more mileage out of Lou Piniella, who doubled in the second inning and scored their only run on a 400-foot fly to center field by Graig Nettles. But the Reds did not particularly need Dan Driessen, their 10th man, who got no hits in four times at bat, though he reached base on an error in the eighth. In any event, the Yankees were back in postseason play and that was probably revolution enough. Since Babe Ruth arrived in Yankee Stadium 56 years ago, they have appeared in 29 World Series and won 20. During their best years, from 1949 through 1964, they made it in 18 of 17 years and played in 56 of the 95 Series games. But since then, when the regular season ended, Yankee teams had gone home—until this October, when they finally won the pennant in the final inning of the final playoff game. Boston Apartment Houses Burn BOSTON, Oct. 15 (AP)—Damage was estimated at $250,000 in a five-alarm fire that burned through 13 apartment houses in the Jamaica Plain section Friday, fire department officials said. No injuries were reported. An arson squad was called to investigate.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15 (AP)—Public a Ralph Nader organization, announced today that only one member of the House and no member of the Senate scored 100 per cent on its rating of consumer votes in the past Congressional session. It also announced that Senator Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic Vice-Presidential candidate, scored 70 per cent on it rating while the Republican Vice-Presidential candidate, Senator Robert J. Dole, scored 8 per cent. Mr. Mondale's record, the organization said, was marred by his absence from 17 of the 71 key Senate votes surveyed.

The only member of the House who scored 100 percent on the survey was Elizabeth Holtzman, Brooklyn Democrat. The top rating in the Senate was by William Proxmire, Wisconsin Democrat, and John C. Culver, Iowa Democrat, with 92 per cent ratings. The votes used in the survey selected from the subjects of protection, procedural and regulatory reform, oil and gas policy, atomic energy and government subsidies. The worst rating in the Senate went to Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican, who voted "wrong" on 69 votes. In the House, the worst rating—also zero—went to Edward Hebert, Louisiana Democrat.

'76 Politics Fail to Disturb Campus Calm and Cynicism

BY JON NORDHEIMER
Special to The New York Times

KENT, Ohio — Harriet Begala was seated. The Democratic Party's rally at Kent State University the other night was the best political showing on campus since 1972.

On a campus with more than 20,000 full-time students, most from working-class backgrounds, fewer than 30 students had turned out in a show of support for Jimmy Carter. And even those who came seemed nervous and wary, hesitant to volunteer their time.

"It's not like '72, when we had more than 400 student volunteers manning the phones for George McGovern," Mrs. Begala, a local Democratic worker, said later, "but it's far better than 1974 when we had to pay 10 women to make phone calls in the campaign for governor when we couldn't get student volunteers."

The fact that anyone could be pleased by such an anemic turnout was indicative of how low political activism has fallen on Kent State's campus, where National Guard troops killed four students after opening fire on an anti-Vietnam War protest demonstration in 1972.

But all across the nation this fall, not just Kent State, both rebellion and activism seem far from students' minds. Protest, in this generation of college students, is not only dead—it is "uncool."

Bear busts and R.O.T.C. are back in vogue. "I expect party raids and goldfish swallowing by Thanksgiving," an Ivy League faculty member who experienced the tumult of the student protest of the '60's remarked sardonically.

The current Presidential campaign, for the most part, has a remote, detached presence on campuses where four years ago thousands of students plunged into the volunteer work of the Nixon-McGovern race. On nearly every campus, with the possible exception of schools in Georgia, campaign organizers report finding little student enthusiasm for either Mr. Carter or President Ford, the Republican incumbent.

Apathy vs. Anomie

Some observers have compared today's campus mood to the buttoned-down apathy of students in the 1950's. But the causes of the current inaction are different.

In the 50's there was apathy: Students simply sought individual goals within the context of an ordered society that had their general approval and confidence. Today there is anomie: a general distrust of and lack of involvement with the nation's leadership and institutions, bewilderment and confusion over what to do, how to do it, and little faith in the effectiveness of any kind of action.

"What we are seeing today is a move toward privatism," said Prof. Sanford M. Dornbusch, a sociologist at Stanford University in California since 1959.

"Instead of joining others for change, this generation of students is giving up and saying, 'How am I going to survive?'" There's a great stress on individual fulfillment rather than societal improvement.

"Politicians don't understand human feelings," remarked Jean Stone, a sophomore at Miami-Dade Junior College, the largest two-year community college in the East. "and the country is being run by big businesses that have no concern for the average guy. I don't think I can trust either Carter or Ford."

From Palo Alto to Miami, from Boston to Los Angeles, a check with students and faculty members on a dozen campuses turned up the same theme of political alienation coupled with strivings by individuals to impose some form of structure on their personal lives.

Almost everywhere, students were enmeshed by the pursuit of grades and jobs. There was universal concern that a tight job market created by an economic turnaround, and the sheer numbers of the post-World War II baby boom generation now competing for work, would dominate their lives for years to come.

This pragmatism has created a rush in applications to business schools, and everywhere students appear to be turning away from interest in education and the humanities, areas of study that were highly popular among activist students of the 60's.

"Money is the most important value to students today," said Dr. James H. Lewis, professor of agriculture business at Colorado State University. "They are aware of the fact that the free lunch is over."

No Atmosphere for Radicalism

"It is not an atmosphere for bold departures in radicalism," commented Dr. Richard Smoke, a political scientist at the Wright Institute of the University of California at Berkeley, where the student rebellion took its first massive step during the Free Speech Movement in 1964.

Berkeley today has a quiet, almost benign climate compared with the foment of the 60's. In Sprout Plaza, the issues nerve center of the campus, spokesmen of the radical Left are still present, but their rhetoric seems less impassioned—and their audience is almost nonexistent. Much more attention at Sprout seems focused on the advocates of religious cults.

The seniors who now face decisions about their future entered college in the fall of 1973. For the most part, they had no involvement in the years of campus rebellion and political activism. Most played no role in the McGovern campaign of 1972, and only a small minority possess emotional links to the "Keep It Clean For Gene" slogan of the 1968 Presidential campaign of Eugene McCarthy, the former Democratic Senator of Minnesota who is an independent Presidential candidate this year.

Instead, their political instincts have been shaped by the Watergate and intelligence agency scandals and by scary unemployment figures. Their common outlook is cynical and pragmatic, in the view of many who study the evolving nature of the American campus.

The New Generation has become the Me Generation.

There are no heroes on the campus today. In scores of interviews, when the question was put to them, no student proposed the name of an individual who combined those traits worthy of universal respect and emulation: No politicians, no politicians, no rock stars or football heroes.

There are, however, trends on campuses that demand comparisons with the troubled 50's. Social fraternities have rebounded from the low period of 1971-72, when they were widely seen as "not relative" to society's needs, and membership dipped to about 150,000. There are now more than 202,000 members in about 4,800 chapters across the country.

Similarly, Reserve Officer Training Corps units are flourishing nearly everywhere, with the impetus derived from three sources: Peace has eliminated much of the risk factor involved in participation, compensation (upper classmen receive $100 a month in pay and full scholarships cover all tuition and other campus fees) helps thousands of students, who otherwise could not afford a higher education and careers in the military are a part of the general craving for economic security.

Socially, the sexual and drug revolutions of the past decade have created a behavior pattern beyond anything that existed a generation ago. Open dormitories on most campuses mean that men and women students can have affairs without fear of administration or peer disapproval.

Use of alcohol—mainly beer, vodka and tequila—has returned to the campus, but the trend still keeps company with widespread use of marijuana and an assortment of other, nonaddictive drugs.

Trend Toward Frivolity
There is also a trend toward silliness: nonsensical, frivolous activities with no other objective but fun. At Cornell University, for example, dances, parties, trivia contests and even campus beauty contests are in vogue.

A pronounced "preppy" look is returning to campus dress, with clothes in better repair than during the shopworn look of the radical era. There is less reluctance to wear expensive casual clothes: women on mid-American campuses are appearing more often than before in dresses, wearing bras and using more cosmetics.

There also appears to be a return to dormitory life by underclassmen, now that the sexual barriers have been eliminated. Some of the motivation is financial—it is perhaps cheaper in terms of room and board, and life there is not as dependent on transportation to classes and study halls. But observers also see in the trend the same search for structure and control, freedom from too much freedom, that appears in other modes of the new behavior.

Racial lines at most campuses are sharply drawn, with very little interracial dating or social integration. Like their white counterparts, black students today thrive in the structure and form of clubs and fraternities; they are also less likely to rise in protest when programs or privileges won during the days of revolt are diluted or withdrawn by campus administrations today.

When the National Guard troops killed the four Kent State students in the demonstration against the United States incursion in Cambodia in 1970, the incident, and the days that followed, represented perhaps the high water mark of protest on college campuses in this country.

The Kent State tragedy had a special irony because the campus, situated in the rolling hills of Ohio about 50 miles southeast of Cleveland, was a typical state-supported institution that was as representative of mid-American values and attitudes as any that could be found in the nation.

No Cult at Kent State
There is no discernible cult surrounding the "shedding of student blood on the grassy knoll outside Taylor Hall on May 4 seven years ago, but Kent State students appear sensitive to the memory of the event and keep it alive as a kind of oral history. However, student activism at Kent State is as moribund as on any campus in the nation.

When the administration recently imposed rules on dormitory behavior and designated "quiet hours" and "quiet floors," there was not a hint of protest, despite the fact that the new regulations infringed on "freedoms" won during the campus revolt.

The burning of the R.O.T.C. building on campus in 1970 had precipitated the fatal clash between students and troops, but now there is keen competition to enter the R.O.T.C. program.

"The students," said Gary Begala, a 25-year-old Kent State graduate who is running for the State Legislature, "are turned off by political media technicians selling their candidates like soapuds. I'm personally offended by Carter's and Ford's staffs' telling reporters how they're going to merchandise their man and how they won't let them talk about issues. It turns everybody off."

Mr. Begala, a Democrat, had scheduled "rap sessions" at student dormitories to discuss the election. At the first session he was the only person to show up.

John Gargin, 42, a professor of political science at Kent State, said in a recent interview:

"Most of our students are from low-to-middle-income families, many Catholics and ethnics, and they are here to get the credentials they believe are central to admission to the Dream. Everyone does the rhetoric bit—fascist pig this and that—but rush them and they ask you to write recommendations for jobs with banks and insurance companies."

Dr. Gargin said that this generation of college students lacks commitment to either major political party and that that fact has implications for the future that no one has fully explored.

Over at the student psychological counseling center, Dr. Richard C. Rynearson, the director, told of a new melancholy among students on campus who come to his clinic to discuss their emotional problems.

"Symptoms of Depression"
"Their symptoms look like depression but they can still handle their studies," he said. "They're coming in more frequently and asking to see older advisers. 'I don't want to talk to someone my age, they say as though they don't trust anyone their own age. I want someone who's been around longer and knows more.' That's quite different than a few years ago when they feared older advisers would criticize their new life styles."

So far, no individual or group has touched a significant nerve to distract the students from their present course, however undefined and uncharted it is. Graffiti at times can be useful in measuring a community's concern. At Kent State this fall there is an astonishing lack of it outside of the standard bathroom wall jottings. In the turbulent 60's the campus walls were covered with political graffiti, not ivy, and the slogans, however romantic or fierce, indicated movement and direction: "Power to the People!" or "Right On!"—such phrases at least showed a sense of purpose.

Outside the beer hall at the student center at Kent State today there were only a couple of scrawled lines worthy of note.

UTAH GROUP STAGES RALLY AGAINST SMUT

9,000 Attend Mormon-Backed Meeting, Part of 10-Month Campaign in Salt Lake City

By GRACE LICHTENSTEIN
Special to The New York Times

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 16—In the face of recent reports of liberalized morals in Utah, more than 9,000 people nearly filled the Salt Palace Arena this morning for a well-publicized rally against pornography.

The gathering, endorsed enthusiastically by the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-day Saints (Mormons) and supported by a wide range of non-Mormons, was the latest event in a 10-month anti-pornography campaign in Salt Lake City. The campaign is designed to shut down theaters showing X-rated movies and to force newstands to stop selling sexually explicit magazines.

The campaign, which has become a factor in the race for Attorney General in Utah, is perhaps the most concerted effort in the country by an anti-pornography group to articulate "community standards."

In a landmark 1973 decision, the United States Supreme Court ruled that such standards were to be applied in deciding whether sexually explicit matter is illegal. Two related cases are on the high court docket this term.

"Rally for Decency"
Speakers at today's "Rally for Decency," which was scheduled for 9 A.M., so that it would not interfere with the Utah State-University of Utah football game or the World Series, told the appreciative crowd that rally was a battle on the way to victory.

A few purveyors would have you believe that the people of Utah condone smut, but the people of our community intend to drag this filth out of our state, declared Robert F. Weyher Sr., chairman of Utahans Against Pornography.

Since the start of the anti-pornography crusade last January, according to one speaker, the owner of two movie theaters has been sentenced to six months in jail for selling obscene films and the number of theaters showing X-rated films in Salt Lake City has declined from six to three.

However, he did not mention that several other theaters often show such films and that dozens of R-rated (restricted) movies routinely play first-run houses here. This week, for example, "Straw Dogs," a film with a graphic rape scene, and "The Ritz," a movie about a homosexual bathhouse, are among the town's attractions.

Cultural Events Altered

On the other hand, cultural events in Salt Lake City are sometimes altered in deference to Utah's heavily Mormon, conservative views. The Gaslight Dinner Theatre left out a line from "Forty Carats" in a recent production because it referred obliquely to sexual intercourse. The Utah Repertory Dance Theater, which a few weeks ago gave a performance in New York with dancers seminude in New York, plans to present the same performance here with dancers fully clothed.

An official of Utahans Against Pornography also reported that major chain stores, including Safeway and Albertson's, have stopped selling some magazines after visits by members of the organization. He said that the group planned to put pressure on the Salt Lake County Commission in order to get the newsstand at the Salt Lake Airport to take a similar step.

In addition, the group reported that nine court cases are pending against bookstore and theater owners and that Utah prosecutors were recently given a training seminar by a county attorney in how to win anti-pornography cases.

Those at the rally this morning were repeatedly urged to complain to store owners every time they see sexually explicit magazines, to scrutinize candidates for public office on their views about pornography and to encourage prosecutors to call for jail sentences for those convicted on pornography charges.

The implied political threat was made specific outside the Salt Palace, where supporters of the Republican candidate for State Attorney General were handing out leaflets attacking D. Gilbert Athay, his Democratic opponent. The leaflets condemned Mr. Athay for dismissing a pornography case once while temporarily acting as a local judge and for accepting the endorsement of some attorneys who have defended bookstore and theater managers.

Mondale and Dole Both Claim Victory in Debate

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM
Senators Walter F. Mondale and Robert J. Dole resumed their campaigns for the Vice Presidency yesterday, each claiming victory in their rather acrimonious debate Friday night, but each a bit annoyed that he had left out certain points.

"Humility requires me to say that I won," Senator Mondale remarked, cracking the kind of smile that he used rarely in the debate. He then left Houston for a campaign swing into the industrial Middle West.

Senator Dole, bantering in the same tone he used in the debate, said he thought that the contest had become tedious toward the end but "it went slow when he [Mr. Mondale] was talking."

Mr. Dole's schedule in the next few days includes stops in Oklahoma, Iowa, Missouri, Mississippi, Louisiana and Wisconsin.

Both men said that they had lain awake much of the night reliving the first-ever televised debate between Vice-Presidential candidates.

'Wou' at the Wrong Time

"I sure won that debate between 1 and 5 in the morning," Mr. Mondale said after rising from a fitful sleep in the Rice Hotel in Houston.

He said that he had forced himself not to respond to most of Senator Dole's personal jibes so he could concentrate on the issues, but that he had thought up some fine retorts after he had gone to bed.

Senator Dole said that he, too, had spent a restless night worrying about "all the things I should have said and forgot to say."

In the debate itself, both men stuck to the themes they had pursued throughout the campaign.

Mr. Dole characterized the Democrats as spendthrifts who promised expensive Government programs that the nation could not afford.

Senator Mondale, on the other hand, said that the Republicans were insensitive to the serious social problems facing the country.

On the foreign policy matters, Senator Dole argued that Democratic Administrations had repeatedly pushed the United States into war, while Republicans were the party of peace.

Senator Mondale responded that the Democratic Congress had forced an end to the Vietnam War and had prevented a war in Angola.

Language of Both Sharper

The Vice-Presidential candidates used much sharper language than President Ford and Jimmy Carter have in their two debates so far.

Senator Dole implied that Mr. Mondale was a puppet of organized labor and called his opponent "the most liberal Senator in the United States Senate."

Senator Mondale called the Republican "a hatchet man."

Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter telephoned their running mates after the debate to congratulate them on their performances.

Among the sharpest words after the debate were those from Rosalynn Carter, wife of the Democratic Presidential candidate. She accused Senator Dole of issuing "half truths" and of being "a dirty campaigner."

She said her husband's reaction to the debate was that "he was even more sure now that he had picked the right person to be his Vice President."

No Major Polls Taken

No major polling organization attempted a survey after the debate to determine whom the viewers thought had won.

But, for whatever it is worth, four college debate coaches who judged the debate for the Associated Press said that Mr. Mondale had won a clear victory.

According to preliminary research by NBC, the debate was watched by about 70 million people on television. The audiences for the two Presidential debates have been estimated at 94 million and 85 million respectively. However, the number of people watching television on Friday nights is normally lower than it is on other nights of the week.

Time and again, throughout the evening, Senator Dole shot personal barbs at Mr. Mondale and Mr. Carter.

At times, his remarks were in jest, as when, in his opening statement, he declared that he and his Democratic counterpart had "been friends, and we'll be friends when this debate is over, and we'll be friends when the election is over and he'll still be in the Senate."

But, as the debate wore on, Mr. Dole became more biting in his words. He said that George Meany, the labor leader, was the Minnesota's "makeup man," criticized Senator Mondale's attendance record in the Senate, asserted that Mr. Mondale appeared "a little nervous" in the debate and remarked in a derogatory tone that his opponent had come to the Senate first by appointment rather than election.

Senator Mondale resisted counterattacking in the early minutes of the debate, but later he too became more caustic.

He tried several times to link Mr. Dole and Mr. Ford to the Watergate misdeeds of Richard M. Nixon and, apparently angered by one remark of Mr. Dole, declared, "I think Senator Dole has richly earned his reputation as a hatchet man tonight."

No New Issues Breached

The two candidates broke no new ground on the issues of the campaign and deviated not a whit from the established positions of Mr. Carter and Mr. Ford.

Senator Dole tried to picture the Republican ticket as the one that would keep the country at peace and exercise fiscal prudence. He called the Democrats the party of war and excessive spending.

For his part, Mr. Mondale said that he and Mr. Carter would address the social needs of the American people and put the country on a sound economic footing. He accused the Republicans of "defending the past."

Clearly the best moment for Mr. Mondale came toward the end of the evening, after Senator Dole concluded one remark by saying, "I just suggest that maybe in the time remaining Senator Mondale can tell us what his running mate stands for."

Mondale Seizes an Opening

He could not have thrown the Democrat a fatter pitch, and Senator Mondale met it solidly. He ticked off the Carter-Mondale campaign issues: More jobs, less inflation, tax reform, tax reductions, national health insurance, more housing, aid to senior citizens. Then, he concluded:

"Governor Carter stands for leadership. He's going to take charge. We need someone to lead this country. We haven't had it. Governor Carter will provide that leadership. And Governor Carter will restore to this nation a foreign policy that operates in the public and on the basis of the belief of the American people."

Because of the debate's ground rules, Senator Dole did not have a chance to respond immediately.

Senator Dole was strongest when defending President Ford's record on the economy.

Asked about Mr. Ford's many vetoes of spending bills, the Kansas declared, "He's vetoed 63 bills—I think the 62nd happened today—and I say that's a courageous act repeated 62 times, because most of that legislation sounded good, some of it was good, some of it just couldn't have unless we're going to fuel the fires of inflation."

vised the President's words and political intentions into a nearly unrecognizable form and earlier this month was accusing Mr. Ford of being brainwashed and of having disgraced the country.

At Joliet Mr. Ford said that Jimmy Carter on two occasions said he would cut the defense budget by $15 billion—and then he had the gall to tell the American people, 90 million of them, last week that "never said it. Can you trust him?"

In Pontiac he said that Mr. Carter's remark in the second debate that the United States was not respected today meant that Jimmy Carter is slandering 215 million Americans and the United States of America, and "we shouldn't stand for it and we won't."

Warning on Tax Increases

"Jimmy Carter says he will increase taxes for all people with a median income and on up, which means that anybody who is earning $14,000 a year or more is going to have his taxes increased under Jimmy Carter. Do you want that?" the President asked.

Some of the many hundreds of people gathered at the grimy old railroad station at Joliet chorused back, "No!"

Mr. Ford's own latest private polls show him trailing slightly in Illinois. As he campaigned in crisp, sunny weather today from Joliet to Alton, Ill., near St. Louis, Mr. Ford seemed to be determined to make a major effort to capture the state's 26 Electoral College votes.

Mr. Ford has been suffering from a serious case of "political aphasia"—or the inability of a candidate to identify correctly the town in which he finds himself. Today in Bloomington he referred to being in "Joliet, Indiana." Then, at the next stop in Lincoln, Ill., he said it was a pleasure to be "in Pontiac." Correcting that to "Bloomington and Lincoln," Mr. Ford struggled on, saying, "We're great to be here."

Yesterday he said at Iowa State University that it was great to be at Ohio State, and a week ago he referred to a successful rally in "Lawton, Tex.," misplacing Oklahoma City.

Mr. Ford told a crowd at Lincoln, Ill., today that he had received a wire from Mr. Carter "who is attempting to clarify his position on a number of important issues." Mr. Ford continued: "I sent him a telegram indicating that I'm delighted to have him clarify his position on such important issues as income taxes, the deductibility of mortgage interest payments, Federal spending programs and the defense budget."

In the speech, as in the telegram sent to Mr. Carter, Mr. Ford did not acknowledge distorting the Democrat's positions but reiterated that Mr. Carter had made the controversial statements in past interviews or public occasions.

Mr. Ford has pointed out previously that two newspapers in 1975 quoted Mr. Carter as suggesting that a $15 billion reduction in defense spending could be made. For all of this campaign year, however, Mr. Carter has said that he would cut the spending by from $5 billion to $7 billion by eliminating waste.

James A. Baker Jr., Mr. Ford's campaign manager, was asked today whether he thought it was dangerous for the President to suggest that the $15 billion figure represented Mr. Carter's present position. "Do you think Carter should have told the television audience he answered Mr. Baker.

Mr. Ford's discussion of tax policy was based on a given in September in which to suggest that his expression to increase the tax burden incomes might apply to the comes above the national Other passages of the same however, seemed to indicate Carter did not know the de legislation he would offer did not intend to increase the middle-income taxpayers.

F.P.C. AND I.C.C. WORST OF AGI

House Panel Charges I Deficiencies in Reg.

By DAVID BURNHE
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16—A committee charged today the Power Commission had "disrespectful disregard" of its mandate the public while the Interstate Commerce Commission had six deficiencies in its regulation transportation.

In making the allegations, Commerce Subcommittee on and Investigations ranked the I.C.C. as the worst of the nine agencies it has studied over the years.

The Federal Power Commission later the interstate sale of oil and hydroelectric projects and state Commerce Commission re interstate railroads, trucks, barg pipelines.

Representative John E. Moss, California Democrat who heads the committee, said the report showed power commission, relying on dated industry for information received inaccurate and incomplete about the availability of gas. He said that the agency had failed to enforce obligations of the producers and had, by administrative deregulation the price of natural gas.

Mr. Moss said the commission, although somewhat improved years, still had an "ineffective and antiquated" administration which is burdensome on small anticompetitive and overly sup the status quo.

Agency Chiefs Comment

In response to inquiries, the of the two commissions issued statements. Richard L. Dunham, Interstate Commerce Commission, said the report "appears at first glance represent a restatement of the policy differences Chairman Moss with the F.P.C. over a number of years."

George M. Stafford, head of Interstate Commerce Commission, said that the of the subcommittee's attack on mission "seems to us to be base agency's own recent extensive investigation, which took a hard part look at only the bad part compliance program."

Among the specific failures power commission, according to committee, were the following:

• "The F.P.C. in the last five years demonstrated a conscious disregard statutory mandate to protect the lag public from exploitation" by gas price decisions that set not based on the criteria set out Natural Gas Act.

• "The agency has failed to enforce law requiring natural gas producers deliver the natural gas to be promised to suppliers."

• "The agency has failed to develop reliable information on the actual availability of gas, instead to obtain the information the industry through its trade association."

Concerning the Commerce Commission subcommittee report said that cause the agency was unable to set its enforcement effort on "actions of dubious value and major violations." The report also the agency supported bars to new companies entering surface transportation, "which stifle competition and increase the cost of transportation services."

Carter Asserts Ford Is 'Misleading'

watching the Vice-Presidential candidates' debate on television.

He had come down from his suite late last night to talk about his reaction to the debate, but there was no hint of his decision to wire his protests to the President.

But this morning, he began his remarks by reading the telegram and explaining his resentment at Mr. Ford's use of the charges in his nationally televised news conference. "I think," he said, "it was highly misleading to him to say that without my having an adequate chance to respond."

Mr. Carter had been urging the President to hold such a news conference for several weeks now, asserting that he was allowing himself to be questioned regularly by reporters during his campaign.

The Democrat was regularly visible to the press and accessible for on-the-run questions at the bottom of airplane ramps. But he had not presented himself in a formal news conference setting in more than two weeks.

Today, in his appearance before the local and national press in Kansas City, he repeated much of what he had suggested in his telegram.

He said the major thrust of his tax reform would be the elimination of provisions such as tax shelters "that permit people to get an unwarranted advantage." He also suggested that, with the changing of such provisions, tax rates could be lowered at every income level.

At midmorning, he flew here, the scene of the opening game of the World Series. Mr. Carter spent a few minutes shaking hands at Lunken Airport, and then moved inside, where he telephoned the managers of the Cincinnati Reds and the New York Yankees to wish each of them good luck.

Moments later, he used several baseball metaphors in a speech inside before about 1,500 people. Poor planning by his advance staff, however, made it possible for only about 200 of them to either see or hear him.

TEXT OF TELEGRAM

To President Gerald Ford. You have made erroneous statements about my position on several important issues.

One. I do not advocate increasing income taxes on low or middle income families. Two. I do not advocate eliminating the existing homeowner income tax credits. Three. I do not advocate new spending programs which would cost anything near $100 billion. My pledge is to have a balanced budget by 1980 and to phase in new programs only as funds become available through an expanding economy and improved government management. Four. I do not advocate a $15 billion reduction in the defense budget. My projection of savings from efficiency and elimination of waste is from $5 billion to $7 billion.

I am sure that after these corrections, you, as a man of integrity, will refrain from making these misleading and erroneous statements to the American people.

Jimmy Carter

Foreign Policy Questions

KANSAS CITY, Oct. 16 (AP) — Mr. Carter was asked what he would do if an Eastern European country were to revolt against Soviet domination — a question that Mr. Ford sidestepped at a televised news conference Thursday.

"I don't know what I would do," Mr. Carter said. "But I wouldn't send American troops in."

The Democratic nominee also said "I wouldn't go back on the commitment" to protect Taiwan against military takeover but would seek a pledge from mainland China that it would never use military force toward that end.

American atomic weapons would be withdrawn from South Korea, he said, and American troops would be pulled out over a four-to-five-year period, although "adequate tactical air cover" would be continued and the South Korean military forces would be strengthened.

He added, "I don't see any immediate prospect of normalization of relations with Cuba," and would not make that a priority goal of his administration.

Daley Man Appears to Trail for Illinois Governor

By SETH S. KING
Special to The New York Times

ROCKFORD, Ill., Oct. 15—The small, twin-engine plane had barely bounced to a halt when James R. Thompson leaped out of the cockpit, framed out of it and bounded across the wind-blown runway and into the tiny terminal building, there to face a cluster of Rockford television crews.

With the clipped precision of a successful prosecutor, which he was, he ticked off the major parts of his proposal for a tougher, more efficient criminal justice system in Illinois.

Then Mr. Thompson, who in a few whirlwind months has become the great hope of this state's embattled Republicans, happily restated the issue he considers paramount in the race for Governor: independence from Chicago's Mayor Richard J. Daley and from any other established political faction in Illinois.

The Illinois Secretary of State, Michael J. Howlett, is Mr. Thompson's Democratic opponent, the 74-year-old Mayor.

But, as always in Illinois politics, the question of the Mayor's influence and the antagonism of the suburbs and downstate communities toward him is the overriding factor in this election.

Chosen to Defeat Walker

Mr. Howlett, a boundlessly warm, friendly man who would have been happy to continue being Secretary of State, was considered by the Mayor to be the only Democrat who could beat the incumbent Governor, Daniel Walker, the Mayor's bitter political enemy, in the primary.

Mr. Howlett did that with the all-out help of the Cook County machine. The machine and the downstate Democratic committees are again at full throttle in support of him. But Mr. Howlett must bear the burden of identity with them, and in the Chicago suburbs and in other nonurban areas Mr. Thompson is reaping the benefits of this guilt by association.

In all variety of pre-election polls, some taken earlier this week, Mr. Thompson was running from 15 to 25 percentage points ahead of his Democratic opponent.

And in the Chicago wards, Mr. Howlett's edge did not appear wide enough to offset the apparent Thompson strength outside the city.

"Nor does the Presidential race appear to be having any coattail effect on the gubernatorial race. In areas where Jimmy Carter is building a modest lead over President Ford, Mr. Howlett is not benefiting. And where Mr. Thompson is running away from the Democrat, Mr. Ford is either only slightly ahead or in some cases behind Mr. Carter."

Some Difference on Taxes

Only on the approach to taxes, the most sensitive of political issues in Illinois, is there any significant difference between Mr. Howlett and Mr. Thompson.

With no equivocation, Mr. Howlett has promised there would be no tax increase in his two-year term and, if the legislature voted one, he'd veto it.

"I can't promise that," Mr. Thompson told an audience of suburban manufacturers in Rosemont Thursday.

"I don't want a tax increase," he said, "but I can't say one won't be necessary because I don't know at this time what the people of Illinois will want and how much they'll be willing to pay for."

The obvious contrast between the two candidates is in their appearance and style.

The portly Mr. Howlett, who is 62 years old, looks and sounds like a skilled ward politician from the old West Side of Chicago, which he is.

In recent years, his identity with the Chicago machine Democrats was not as clear as it is today. First as a three-term State Auditor and then as Secretary of State, Mr. Howlett was a champion vote getter, with a legion of downstate friends in both parties.

Always a Prosecutor

The 40-year-old Mr. Thompson, seeking his first elective office, seems blessed with boundless energy and quick reflexes. He is a Chicago boy, too. But he has spent his entire public life as a prosecutor, first as a Cook County assistant state's attorney, then as an assistant attorney general, and finally as United States Attorney. In between, he taught criminal law at Northwestern University's law school.

The urbane Mr. Thompson, who considers himself a liberal Republican, talks of restoring respectability to the tattered image of Illinois politics.

"I want to be able to use the word pride in conjunction with Illinois politics without making you laugh—or cry," he told an audience in his affluent suburb of Oak Brook last night.

Two days earlier, Mr. Howlett was also in Rockford, greeting a Democratic gathering that was surprisingly large for this usually Republican area.

Even here, where he was at ease and happy among his friends, Mr. Howlett felt the need to stress that he was a man for the whole state and not just Chicago.

"I'm going to form an alliance of all kinds of people in all parts of Illinois to get this state moving," he declared. "And when I'm Governor, I'm going to come back to Rockford and prove that I can erase the differences between Cook County [Chicago] and the rest of the state."

In recent days, Mr. Howlett has been attacking Mr. Thompson for his methods as a Federal prosecutor, accusing him of misusing grants of immunity to convict some and to save others, particularly his wealthy supporters.

This has surprised local political observers, who wondered if these attacks merely reminded voters that Mr. Thompson had secured the indictments of more than 300 politicians of both parties and had obtained convictions in 95 percent of the cases tried so far.

And they wondered if these attacks recalled to the voters that among those convicted were several leading members of the Democratic machine.

They also noted that Mr. Thompson seldom failed to remind his listeners that Mr. Howlett had been the choice of Mayor Daley.

"Howlett was hand-picked by Daley to beat Walker," he charged again today. "Howlett didn't want to run for Governor. He would be dominated by the Daley machine when what the people of this state want is independence in Springfield."

Soviet Astronauts Are Told to Return to Earth After Failure of Soyuz to Dock With Orbiting Station

By DAVID K. SHIFLER
Special to The New York Times

Oct. 16—Two Soviet astronauts were ordered to abort their mission and return to earth after a failed attempt to dock their spacecraft with the orbiting station, reported in a brief dispatch by the Soviet press agency.

The Soyuz capsule's guidance system had malfunctioned throughout the rest of the day, no further word on the fate of the astronauts, Lieut. Col. Vyacheslav Zudov and Lieut. Col. Valery Rozhdestvensky, both of the Air Force. No announcement was made of exactly when they were scheduled to bring their spacecraft down.

They had blasted off Thursday night from the Baikonur launching site in Soviet Central Asia, apparently planning an extended stay in space. The Salyut 5 station, sent into orbit June 22, was occupied last summer by a two-man Soyuz 21 crew during a 48-day mission. The Soyuz 23 astronauts were to have continued experiments and research begun by the Soyuz 21 crew.

About 25 hours after blast-off, Tass said, Soyuz 23 was put into an automatic mode for its approach to Salyut 5.

"Docking with the Salyut 5 station was canceled because of the off-design regime of the approach control system," Tass said. The Russian-language report called it "an uncalculated regime," suggesting that the system was deviating from its program.

"The crew are completing the mission and are preparing to return to earth," the press agency said.

The report, which came more than 12 hours after the docking failure, was believed to be the first occasion on which the Russians have made public their problems before the completion of a space flight. In previous practice, there would have been no announcement until the astronauts had returned to earth.

The sudden end of the Soyuz 23 mission was considered a setback for the centerpiece of the Soviet manned space program, which has concentrated on flights in orbiting stations, rather than attempts to send men to the moon or the planets.

The program has been plagued with difficulties. In June 1971, three Soviet astronauts died returning to earth during a decompression malfunction in their Soyuz 2 capsule. They had spent 22 days aboard Salyut 1.

In April 1973 a Salyut 2 station was put into orbit, but its solar panels supplying energy were ripped off and it could not be manned. Some Western experts reported a failure in 1972 to orbit a Salyut station because of a rocket malfunction.

In August 1974, Soyuz 15 failed to dock with an orbiting Salyut station, and in April 1975, an unnumbered Soyuz craft with two astronauts aboard was forced back to earth after the third stage of their rocket veered off course in the launching. The next month, a second crew made a successful rendezvous with Salyut 4 and stayed in space for 63 days.

Two American manned missions have been ended early because of mechanical malfunctions.

One was Gemini 8, which in March 1966 performed the first successful docking of two craft in space. One of the Gemini's small maneuvering rockets began firing uncontrollably, spinning the capsule crazily. The two astronauts, Neil A. Armstrong and Maj. David R. Scott of the Air Force, got the craft under control and made an emergency splashdown in the Pacific.

F-14 FUNDS APPROVED, WITH MANY UNAWARE

$15 Million Item for Jet Engine
Tucked Away in Defense Funds
Bill Backed by Congress

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16—Without the knowledge of most of its members, Congress has approved a $15 million down payment on a $2 billion program to develop and build a new, more powerful jet engine for the Navy's troubled F-14 interceptor plane.

Tucked away in the recently approved $104 billion defense appropriations bill was a $15 million item, blandly described in the reports of the appropriations committees as earmarked "for development of a new engine for the F-14."

How that item got into the appropriations bill provides an example of how the military services and their contractors are able to influence the armed services and appropriations committees and how these committees, in turn, are able to commit Congress to expensive defense programs without ever fully explaining the potential cost to the members.

Three groups, working in concert, were primarily responsible for the insertion of the item into the appropriations bill. They are the Navy, which wants a more maneuverable F-14; the Grumman Aerospace Corporation, which wants to build more F-14's, and the Pratt & Whitney Division of the United Technologies Corporation, which wants to build more engines for the plane.

Sympathetic Members Used

Working through committee staffs and selected committee members sympathetic to the cause, since it might attract business to their home districts, the three groups, step by step in the legislative process, arranged for the $15 million item to be included first in the military authorization bill and then in the defense appropriations bill.

The only hitch developed when the General Electric Company learned about the plan to fund development of a Pratt & Whitney engine and wanted to be included in the program.

Among those enlisted by General Electric in its cause was Senator Joseph M. Montoya, Democrat of New Mexico who is a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee. According to Congressional sources, Senator Montoya was sympathetic because General Electric, the Northrop Corporation and the McDonnell-Douglas Corporation had promised jobs in New Mexico if Congress would approve their new F-18 fighter for the Navy.

In the final report approved by the House-Senate conference committee, General Electric got the language changed to provide for "competitive hardware demonstration" of the new engine. Thus, the Navy, which had been thinking only of a Pratt & Whitney engine, will have to consider a scaled-down version of the engine that General Electric is developing for the Air Force's B-1 strategic bomber.

Cost Not Mentioned

Neither in the final conference report nor in the earlier committee reports was any mention made of the ultimate cost of developing and building the new engine. Nor was any mention made that the effect of the new engine would be to add at least $2 million to the cost of the F-14, which at $20 million per copy is now the most expensive fighter in the Pentagon's inventory.

Only indirectly did the cost come out in a largely secret report by the General Accounting Office, which estimated that in 1976 dollars it would cost $1.7 billion to develop and build the new engine. Some analysts in the G.A.O. believe this estimate is overly conservative and predict the ultimate cost will exceed $2 billion.

With the new engine, the Navy would be able to fulfill its original plans for the F-14, plans that thus far have been thwarted by the Defense Department as the cost of the plane escalated.

The Navy started off building the F-14 with a less powerful engine than it wanted. For initial production, the Navy took Pratt & Whitney's TF-30 engine, which had already been developed for the abortive program to develop a joint Air Force-Navy plane known as the TEX. Meanwhile, the Navy, through Pratt & Whitney, began developing a more powerful engine designated the F-401.

The Navy's original plan was to build 'A' models of the F-14 with the TF-30 engine and then shift to a 'B' model with the F-401 engine.

$346 Million in Four Years

The F-401 program was cancelled by the Defense Department in December 1973, after the engine had run into developmental and cost problems. In four years, $346 million was spent developing the engine, about $200 million more than originally estimated by the Navy and Pratt & Whitney. Until General Electric intervened, the Navy planned to resume development of the F-401 engine.

At Defense Department insistence, the Navy has continued building all F-14's with the TF-30 engine. Meanwhile, the engine, which was never "avalized" to meet the stresses of carrier duty, has encountered considerable reliability problems. In the last two years, four aircraft have been lost and three seriously damaged as a result of engine failures.

The problems have become so serious that the Navy has begun a $188 million program to fix the TF-30 engine until the new engine can be developed.

The Navy has a longer-range interest in developing the more powerful engine, namely to turn the F-14 into a combat fighter.

With its existing engine, the F-14 is basically a long-range air defense interceptor for the fleet, providing a platform to fire the Phoenix missiles with their 100-mile range. As a fighter, however, the plane is underpowered, and the new engine would give it the maneuverability to make it into what the Navy describes "the best dogfighter in our operating inventory."

F.B.I. CHIEF SHELVES AN ATTACK ON PRESS

After White House Advice, Kelley Drops Talk of Shift in Policy Toward Some Reporters

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16—Declaring that he was not "an ambassador of bad will," Clarence M. Kelley, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, told the New Mexico Press Association last night that he had not seen the text of a controversial speech containing a harsh attack on the news media until after he boarded a flight bound for Albuquerque, where he had been scheduled to deliver the address.

An advance test of the speech, which Mr. Kelley abandoned after a telephone "consultation" with Attorney General Edward H. Levi, contained an announcement by Mr. Kelley that the Federal Bureau of Investigation would no longer cooperate with reporters who had "journalistically bludgeoned" the bureau.

Mr. Kelley told the New Mexico editors and publishers that the speech had been prepared for him by his "ministry of external affairs," and that after glancing through it aboard the airplane he began to have doubts about it. He assured the group that "the F.B.I. will continue the policy of openness" with reporters that he instituted upon taking over the bureau in 1973.

The bureau's external affairs division, which maintains relations with the news media, is also responsible for producing Mr. Kelley's speeches.

One bureau official said today that it was indeed possible that the Director, who had given another speech in Virginia earlier in the day, had not become aware of the strong language in his prepared remarks until he was on the way to New Mexico.

A Contrasting View

But bureau officials asked yesterday to elaborate on the critical speech, copies of which had been made available in advance to reporters here, indicated that Mr. Kelley had played a role in formulating the concepts endorsed in the speech, and that the change in the bureau's press policy that he was scheduled to announce had already been put into effect.

Asked which reporters Mr. Kelley was referring in his intended remarks about selective reporting and "heavy-handed interpretation," one bureau spokesman replied that "the people the Director has in mind know who they are."

The spokesman said that the bureau, following along the lines of the proposed Kelley speech, planned to withhold its cooperation from journalists it felt were preparing a "hatchet job" on the bureau or were intending "to make us look bad."

He added that Mr. Kelley had not written the speech itself, but that he had endorsed the tack it took.

In the bureau hierarchy, only Mr. Kelley has the authority to order such a change in the bureau's policy toward the news media.

Called Levi in Chicago

Mr. Kelley told the Albuquerque news executives last night that, after reading through the speech on the Washington-to-Chicago leg of his flight, he discussed his concern by telephone with Mr. Levi, who was also in Chicago, on a stopover at O'Hare International Airport there.

But officials in the Justice Department and the White House, who said they knew nothing of the proposed speech until the bureau began releasing advance copies of it yesterday afternoon, said later that the telephone conversation had been initiated by Mr. Levi after he was advised by Philip W. Buchen, President Ford's counsel, that the remarks were contrary to Mr. Ford's policy toward the news media.

After that conversation, Mr. Kelley released a statement explaining that he had "departed from Washington today prepared to give a speech which appears to give the wrong impression and does not truly reflect my feelings about the press."

"We seek not to blame others for our plight," he said, but he conceded that "perhaps our concern unduly intruded upon our reason and gave rise to rhetoric which too harshly assessed the blame on the press."

The original speech had contained the admonition that the F.B.I. "will not continue to throw open the doors for those [reporters] who invariably dash us with scalding water."

"If a journalist continually displays an obsession to support his own hostile notions about our agency," it read, "then he cannot expect to continue to enjoy any sort of productive relationship with us."

PAPER UNION DELEGATES APPROVE MERGER TALKS

Special to The New York Times

HOLLYWOOD, Fla., Oct. 15—Delegates to the convention of the United Paperworkers International Union here have authorized the union's executive board to continue negotiations for a possible merger with the International Printing and Graphic Communications Union. The combined membership of the two unions would be about 445,000.

If the merger details are worked out, a spokesman said, final approval would be submitted to a special convention for approval.

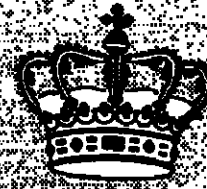

Joseph P. Tonelli, president of the Paperworkers, told the delegates that such a merger would help protect the union's wage structure and benefits and would unify workers in the paper and printing industries. Technological changes and the growth of multinational companies in the industries, he said, have made a merger necessary.

Officers of the paperworkers were re-elected at this week's convention. These included Mr. Tonelli, Henry Segal, secretary-treasurer, and George O'Bea, vice president-at-large.

Delegates voted to increase per capita dues from $6 a month to $8.50, with $5 going to the international. The contribution to the defense fund was increased from 50 cents to $1 a month. The union is facing major negotiations in the industry next year.

ge Rejects Pleas to Block Questioning of Kelley by Socialist Workers Party About Burglaries by F.B.I.

ARNOLD H. LEBASCH
 Mr. Kelley, Director of the Bureau of Investigation, will be asked to testify by Judge Griesa, who is presiding over the Federal District Court in Manhattan. The suit seeks damages for the burglaries and other offenses against the Socialist Workers Party.

which is a form of testimony called a deposition, was made by Government lawyers who contended that the heads of agencies were traditionally "exempt from being harassed by this type of deposition."
 In rejecting the move to quash the deposition, Judge Griesa observed that a bureau informer burglarized the Socialist Workers Party's office in Denver last July, while Mr. Kelley was the bureau's director, and that the issues in the party's lawsuit "involve an increasingly wide network of people and offices in the F.B.I."

would have permitted the plaintiffs to examine the director of the F.B.I. two years ago or something like that. At this juncture, it seems to me that it would be improvident, inappropriate to bar the plaintiffs from taking the deposition of Director Kelley."
 The party's lawyers intend to ask Mr. Kelley about the many informers, burglaries and disruptive measures that the bureau used in investigating the Socialist Workers Party and its affiliate, the Young Socialist Alliance. The party, including the youth affiliate, reports a dues-paying membership of 2,500.

Last month, Attorney General Edward H. Levi ordered the bureau to end the 38-year-long investigation of the party. But the party's Presidential candidate, Peter Camejo, complained that the announced termination of the investigation was a sham.
 Leonard B. Boudin and Herbert Jordan, the party's lawyers, stressed to Judge Griesa that Mr. Kelley's instructions to the bureau's field offices said that they could continue investigating individual members of the party who were "likely to use force of violence in violation of Federal law."

the investigation to end completely, also demand that the bureau withdraw all its informers from inside the party and give the party all its files on the informers. The Government had disclosed in court papers that the bureau still had about 66 informers in the party and its youth affiliate as of last June.
 A motion by Mr. Boudin to obtain the bureau's files on 19 unidentified informers has drawn vehement opposition from the Government's lawyers, William S. Brandt, Thomas E. Moseley and Stuart I. Parker, who submitted a 70-page memorandum urging Judge Griesa to preserve the confidentiality of the informers. "What is at stake on this motion," the memorandum said, "is nothing less than the ability of the F.B.I. and other law-enforcement agencies to obtain information which is vitally necessary to the continued performance of their duties."

 Informers insist on confidentiality because they can be subjected to retaliation and harassment if their identities are disclosed, the memorandum said. It contended that disclosure of the files on informers could destroy the bureau's ability to maintain "this vital source of investigative information."

BUTZ POLICY SCORED BY BLACK EDUCATORS

Heads of Land-Grant Colleges Say Agriculture Department Failed to Provide Enough Funds

By REGINALD STUART
Special to The New York Times

HUNTSVILLE, Ala.—The heads of several black land-grant colleges contend that the Agriculture Department must share responsibility for the low number of blacks in the field of agriculture because it has underfinanced the nation's 16 black land-grant colleges.

The allegations were made in interviews with the college officials after Earl L. Butz, who resigned Oct. 4 as Secretary of Agriculture after criticism of a joke he told that was derogatory to blacks, justified the department's low ratio of black employees on the ground that "blacks just haven't trained for agricultural careers" and have "used education to get away from the farm" instead.

But the black college heads faulted what they said was the deliberate refusal of the Agriculture Department to channel millions of dollars—appropriated by Congress for agricultural training and research—to black land-grant colleges while making such funds available to white land-grant colleges.

This, they said, had also resulted in many cases in the denial to the black colleges of matching funds from the states and had, in turn, made careers in agricultural sciences virtually unattainable and very unattractive to blacks.

Inequitable Funding Charged

"In the overall situation, from the very inception of the black land-grant college idea, this matter of equitable distribution of the funds has fallen very, very short," said Dr. Richard Morrison, president of Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical University in Huntsville, the black land-grant college in Alabama.

"There were no research funds for black colleges until recently. This has denied black kids the opportunity to participate in research or even just look at someone else do it."

Herman B. Smith, Jr., chancellor of the University of Arkansas at Pine Bluff, Arkansas' black land-grant college, agreed saying:

"Historically, black land-grant colleges have been underfinanced and unable to participate in Federal land-grant programs. The U.S.D.A. [Department of Agriculture] ignored these institutions for years and has failed to take advantage of opportunities to help them."

Dr. Smith is a former director of the Office for the Advancement of Public Negro Colleges, a unit of the National Association of State Universities and Landgrant Colleges.

A number of other leaders of black land-grant colleges expressed similar views, but declined to be quoted.

Agriculture Aide Disagrees

Robert W. Long, Assistant Secretary for conservation, research and education in the Agriculture Department, disagreed with the college presidents: "It astounds me how anyone could say something like that," he said. "There's no truth whatsoever that there's been a concerted effort to withhold these funds. The documentation is clear."

Land-grant colleges trace their origin to the 1862 Morrill Act under which the Federal Government gave certain lands to individual states to sell to raise money for a post-secondary school that would train low-income residents in trades and agricultural and military science.

However, these schools were segregated until the 1960's. Land-grant colleges for blacks were established under the Morrill Act of 1890 when Southern whites saw a need to give blacks greater educational opportunities but did not want them attending white schools. All of the black schools are in Southern and border states.

Separate Schools in 16 States

Since 1890, some 16 states have established and maintained two land-grant colleges—one for blacks and another for whites. Congress has provided funding for the land-grant colleges through a variety of acts, which, according to the black college presidents as well as a high official of the Agriculture Department, who declined to be quoted, give the department the authority to distribute the money as it sees fit.

However, they said, the department, until the late 1960's, consistently funneled an overwhelming portion of the funds to the white schools. In doing so, it followed the wishes of the 16 states, which were attempting to preserve a policy of segregation.

Most of the funds for black schools have come from "separate," special acts, according to Mr. Long.

Based on a review of Congressional testimony and Federal budget documents, the distribution of Federal land-grant funds to black and white land-grant colleges in the same states reflects wide gaps.

As late as the fiscal year 1971, in the 16 states with separate land-grant colleges for blacks and whites, the white schools were allocated approximately $87 million by the Agriculture Department through the Hatch and Smith-Lever acts.

At the same time, the black schools, through their main source of Federal agricultural funding (Public Law 89-106), were allocated a total of $286,000, or about $18,000 per school.

Disparity in Allotments

When combined with matching funds from state and local governments, funds for those 16 white colleges for the fiscal year that ended June 30, 1972, totaled $267.7 million for research and extension work alone. The black schools received a total of $16.8 million for programs related to agriculture.

Mr. Long of the Agriculture Department said that the black schools had gotten all of the money that Congress had agreed to give them. However, presidents of the black colleges have insisted over the years that the department had the authority to allocate more money to their schools.

Dr. Morrison said that most of the initiative in providing funds for the black colleges had come from Congress, not the Agriculture Department, except for 1969 to 1971 when Clifford M. Martin served as Secretary.

He asked that the appropriation for black land-grant colleges be increased from $286,000 to $4 million. Then, as the result of an amendment offered by Representative Frank E. Evans, Democrat of Colorado, the black schools' appropriation for the fiscal year 1973 was increased to $12.6 million.

FRANAY GUFFE

Supporters of New York City's public library system rallied yesterday to urge the city administration to restore and extend jobs of employees whose positions have been jeopardized by budget cuts.

Supporters, who included Councilman Percy E. Sutton and his counterpart in the City Council, Henry J. Stern, were unable to secure a commitment from John E. Zuccotti, the city's First Deputy Mayor. New York City's "additional economies" would be paid for by the city government.

Mr. Zuccotti said that the Board of Education had gathered in the City Council Chamber at City Hall. "Disappointed," Mr. Stern, the Councilman at Large, in summing up the sentiment of the supporters of the library system.

A meeting had been organized by the Public Library and other public officials to convey to City Council members the reasons for the proposed cuts and the over-reduced services in the system of the New York City Public Library. The branch system, Mr. Zuccotti said, is the backbone of the city government.

A section of people here is "concerned," Mr. Zuccotti, referring to a budget-cutting plan that had resulted in a loss of nearly 22 percent of the city's public library officials.

Mr. Zuccotti said that the city government is "very sorry" that it gets to be painful to see the library staff working only a few hours a week. He said that the fact of staff cutbacks most of the time is not a very sorry tale, but a very, very sorry tale, as his supporters added, as his supporters added.

After Mr. Zuccotti's remarks, the audience tried to get Mr. Zuccotti's attention. At one point, Mr. Zuccotti observed the protesters and then there was a commotion. Mr. Zuccotti, who was the speaker at the two-hour event, said that he had to have order here.

Roller Skating Rink Gets a Landing Strip for Airplane Day

It stood in the middle of the roller skating rink and very gingerly landed a model airplane.

Mr. Loboito was demonstrating his skill at model-airplane flying to a crowd of nearly a thousand people who had gathered for Airplane Day Two.

The model planes, each costing the skater $1,000, flew for several minutes over the skating rink to the delight of the spectators.

Mr. Loboito said when asked how he felt about flying a model airplane that this is the closest he can get to a combat situation. He said that he had to have order here.

Top Officers Say Police Protests Have Led to Chaos in Department

They are not taking risks. The feeling right now is, 'Cover your behind and forget about taking chances or making tough decisions.'"

On Friday, Chief Bouza, who is in charge of all uniformed officers in the Bronx, openly criticized Commissioner Codd by calling for a "top-to-bottom" reorganization of the department.

Officials at Police Headquarters, in the field and at City Hall said that the current disagreement with the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association—marked by several serious disorders—had produced the following major consequences:

Reports by precinct supervisors that there has been a slackening off by the 18,000-member patrol force. Arrests apparently have decreased sharply and the number of summonses issued has dropped 30 percent since the protests began. "You always had 10 percent who were non-performers; now it's 20 to 30 percent and it's getting worse," said William Beyer, a sergeant in Brooklyn's 77th Precinct.

Growing concern that the discord and morale problems could ignite a new wave of corruption. "I'm afraid that a lot of cops are so resentful that they may try to shaft the city any way they can, and that includes taking money," said Assistant Chief John Guido, who is in charge of internal corruption investigations.

Field commanders are fearful that they will be made "scapegoats" in any future complaints about police handling of demonstrators.

An almost certain tightening of control by City Hall over police administrative and budget policies. The increased role in police affairs will probably coincide with the appointment of a new Criminal Justice Coordinator in January.

Codd Discounts Evaluation

Commissioner Codd in an interview disagreed with the evaluations that "we're in chaos or in disarray."

A number of cops have had their programs suspended or reduced in scope of the need to provide personnel at the demonstrations, and that may be disturbing them," he said. "Maybe some have forgotten that they have to be able to react on short notice and that this is an emergency period."

Discussing morale problems, Commissioner Codd said:

"That is impossible to gauge. But I don't see any lessening of dedication or interest."

Most officials, however, challenged the Commissioner's views on morale.

"Morale is obviously low at this moment," said Chief Bouza, citing discontent by police officers over a deferral of a 6 percent wage increase and over new work schedules.

Chief Bouza, who is one of the most outspoken commanders in the department, is the subject of a high-level investigation for police failure to stop vandalism by youths outside Yankee Stadium during a heavyweight boxing championship fight on Sept. 28. Meanwhile, it was reported that Chief Bouza is under consideration for a high-level post with the Transit Authority's police forces.

Trend to Over Police Events

Commenting on the departmental inquiry into how supervisors had handled the protests by off-duty officers at the Stadium and elsewhere, Chief Bouza added:

"The long-term effects of this situation will be to demoralize the managerial corps in the department. We will tend to take a chance that a demonstration gets out of hand. We'll paper the city with blue and it's going to cost the city an enormous sum."

In the last three weeks, the overtime bill for officers deployed to oversee off-duty pickets has climbed above $850,000.

Another high-ranking field commander, who asked that his name be withheld, asserted that supervisors were being "nickel-and-dimed" by the investigation of Chief Bouza and the abrupt transfer of another top commander, this official said.

"If you get into trouble, Codd won't back you. No one wants any more initiative or innovations. The rule for the future is: Stay out of trouble and you'll stay in business."

One commander who believes the discord will fade away quickly is Assistant Chief Jules Sachson, who is in charge of the uniformed force in the Brooklyn South area. "But I have no doubts that everything will get back to normal as soon as these contract issues are settled."

Despite defiance of court orders by picketing policemen, field commanders were unanimous in asserting that the protests had been peaceful and that there had been no reason for mass arrests. But the commanders are concerned that the demonstrations could lead to future discipline problems on the patrol force.

"The chiefs were shocked at the way they were defied by the troops," said Sydney Cooper, a retired chief of inspection services. "The cops confronted the bosses [supervisors] and got away with it, and the bosses know it's going to be more difficult to return to routine discipline."

In Brooklyn Beyer said that "serious performance problems" had existed before the protests and that they were increasing.

Supervisory officers "are developing the attitude 'if the men are not willing to do the job why should I care,'" Sergeant Beyer added. "If a guy wants to goof off it's not very difficult," he continued, and I expect to see more and more of it."

Discussing the apparent unconcern in the department with job performance, Sergeant Beyer said:

"My salary is $25,000 and no one questions me about where my men are or what they have done about crime control. The only questions I'm asked is, are the official reports prepared properly. It's paperwork that counts—nothing else."

Chief Guido, the head of the Internal Affairs Division, said the sinking morale might lead to more corruption. "We're getting reports of officer's saying 'I told you the city wouldn't do anything for you.' That bitterness may inspire some people to take revenge on the city and the department by taking graft."

The widespread resentment among officers, Chief Guido said, might also reinforce the "code of silence" in which officers refuse to inform on one another.

Commanding officers ascribe much of the recent disciplinary and morale problem to "a shop-steward mentality" that has sprung up. "The cops are speaking what they have seen other people do in actions acceptable behavior," said one inspector in Manhattan. "This isn't a call for them anymore—it's just a job and they are genuinely convinced that they deserve better treatment from the city."

Public's Estrangement Fears

At City Hall and Police Headquarters there is concern that the dispute will heighten the estrangement between the predominantly white police force and the public, especially in ghetto areas. More than 40 percent of the 26,000 officers and supervisors live outside the city and many have homes in New York's outlying and outlying neighborhoods in Queens and Staten Island.

"There is still a great deal of altruism, service and identification with the communities," Chief Bouza said. "But I am frightened that the problems will create a Fort Apache syndrome—a feeling that the police are a beleaguered band surrounded by hostiles and there is no support between the clients [the community] and the servants [the police]."

The man in the middle of the vortex of internal and political problems is Commissioner Codd, who was one of Mayor Beame's first appointments, in 1974. At the time, the P.B.A. warmly praised Mr. Codd as an almost ideal choice.

The Commissioner had little political trouble until late last year when the budget crisis first caused some of Mayor Beame's aides to begin questioning police priorities and policies.

Despite the criticism—some of it coming from the powerful first deputy mayor, John E. Zuccotti—the Mayor reappointed Mr. Codd to a five-year term last February.

Recent Performance Cited

The fine showing by the department in policing Operation Sail and the Democratic National Convention last July further enhanced Mr. Codd's reputation with City Hall.

"The Police Department is like the Catholic Church, it's not an organization that you can shake up quickly," said an aide to Mr. Zuccotti. "At the top you have to have a guy who understands cops and how the elaborate mechanism of that department works. A commissioner doesn't have to be the best administrator in the world to survive."

Mayor Beame is believed to have picked Mr. Codd for the job partly because of the growing resentment within the department to years of experiments and innovations during the administrations of Mayor John V. Lindsay.

"Mike was not a guy who was going to make any waves, and that was what Beame wanted in 1974," an aide to the Mayor said. "On one dreamt there would be massive layoffs and job problems in the department that was always expanding—not retrenching."

Commissioner Codd and his closest aides, however, were unprepared for the vehemence of the wildcat protests and the rallies organized by the P.B.A., which itself is in the midst of a divisive power struggle.

"We were geared for a possible strike or some kind of a one-day job action," an aide to Commissioner Codd said. "But not an ongoing, escalating series of rallies and protests."

300 Socialists Gather in Tribute To Debs in Hall Off Union Square

By IRVING SPIEGEL

They came to Roosevelt Auditorium at 100 East 17th Street yesterday afternoon—about 300 men and women, long-time Socialists—and for three hours they heard tributes paid to the memory of Eugene V. Debs and Meyer London, founders of the Socialist Party.

The event marked the 50th anniversary of the deaths of Mr. Debs, five times the Socialist Party's candidate for President, and Mr. London, three-term United States Representative from the Lower East Side.

"They were gentle and noble souls," wrote Marx Lewis, who had served as secretary to Mr. London in the House. He could not attend because of illness, but his message was read to the gathering.

"They both were a symbol of the soul of the labor and socialist movements, inspiring and eloquent champions of their cause, and beloved and respected by friend and foe alike."

Charles Grossman, president of the Reunion of Old Timers, who had managed Mr. London's campaigns, remembered both men with reverence.

"Who could forget the night in the old Madison Square Garden on Madison Avenue when 10,000 filled the place and heard two great humanitarians," he said.

"Do you know," he went on, "that in 1912, Debs received close to one million votes, about one-sixth of the total vote cast; that in 1920, the last time he ran, his campaign was conducted from the Atlanta penitentiary, where he was serving a 10-year term for his opposition to America's participation in World War I?"

There was a pause, and the 80-year-old Socialist added: "He again polled close to one million votes."

Hyman Nemser, a lawyer who presided, nodded his head, remarking: "Their memory and spirit lives on."

On stage, Benjamin F. McLaurin, executive director of the Negro Labor Committee, read a note that Mr. Debs had written to Mrs. London on the death of her husband. In part, the note read:

"His character was manly, upright, without reproach, and his name and memory will be cherished not only by his comrades of his day but by generations of comrades that are yet unborn."

Mr. London died on June 6, 1926, at the age of 55 from injuries in an automobile accident—near the auditorium in which his memory was honored. Mr. Debs died of natural causes on Oct. 19, 1926, at the age of 71.

MOYNIHAN URGES AID FOR NEW YORK PORT

He Proposes a Rail Line to Markets and Also Calls for Strengthening of U. S. Merchant Marine Fleet

Daniel P. Moynihan, the Democratic-Liberal candidate for the United States Senate, called last night for the revitalization of the Port of New York and a strengthening of America's merchant marine fleet.

In a speech prepared for the New York Maritime Port Council dinner at said:

"In a period of fiscal crisis, it takes realize that if our city and our region are to recover economic strength, we should turn to that which in the past was our major source of wealth and growth—and that is our port."

Citing a drop over recent years in traffic and what he said was a loss of thousands of jobs, Mr. Moynihan recommended an integrated rail connection from the New York side of the harbor to markets west of the Hudson River.

He also called for greater Federal aid for rail connections, the rehabilitation and continued expansion of container facilities in the port of Brooklyn and the improvement of New York State's barge canal.

Mr. Moynihan, the former United States representative to the United Nations, urged as part of an overall effort to strengthen and expand America's merchant marine fleet the "development of a national cargo policy which assures the United States fleet a fair participation in all United States trade." This was a plank he had sponsored in the 1976 Democratic Party platform.

Earlier, in Albany, Mr. Moynihan acknowledged with apparent regret that he had described his Republican-Conservative opponent, Senator James L. Buckley, as having "an empty head."

"These 18-hour stretches get to you," Mr. Moynihan said during a campaign stop.

He said that he had agreed to debate Senator Buckley on Friday in Syracuse but that a schedule mixup had prevented it. He said that it was his impression the debate had been canceled but that he learned later Mr. Buckley had debated in an empty chair.

"Then I did say that I had been debating an empty head all during the campaign," Mr. Moynihan said, seeming to regret the remark. But, he added, "I still feel Mr. Buckley is empty of constructive political ideas."

Mr. Moynihan said the one "inhibition" in his campaign was a lack of money.

"I went $146,000 in debt for the primary election," he said, "and I've told everybody that for the general election campaign, we wouldn't spend a nickel more than we raised."

Mr. Moynihan also campaigned yesterday during "meet and greet" stops at shopping centers in Huntington, L.I.

Buckley Accuses His Foe Of the 'Big Lie' Technique In 'Radical Right' Charge

By THOMAS P. RONAN

Senator James L. Buckley accused Daniel P. Moynihan yesterday of using "the big lie technique" of Josef Goebbels, Adolf Hitler's chief propagandist, when he described the Senator as "a radical of the right."

"I can't be tagged as a radical, not even as a radical of the right, whatever that means," the Conservative-Republican Senator asserted.

He said that many political observers had watched his votes on issues during his six years in the Senate and that none had described him as a radical. His Democratic-Liberal opponent was trying to throw dust in people's eyes, he said.

The usually mild-mannered Senator, who has been making increasingly sharp attacks on Mr. Moynihan, made the reference to Goebbels at an informal news conference at the Taft Conservative Club in Sunnyside Queens, during an intensive all-day tour of the borough.

Goebbels, who was Hitler's minister for Public Enlightenment and Propaganda, committed suicide during the fall of Berlin.

Mr. Buckley said during his tour that he was in a neck-and-neck race, but that he expected that those now undecided would vote for him. But the most recent poll conducted for Newsday and the Gazette newspapers gave Mr. Moynihan 50 percent of the vote to 40 percent for the Senator with 10 percent undecided.

The Favorite Theme

This was an improvement for Mr. Buckley, who had only 39 percent to Mr. Moynihan's 52 percent in the same poll three weeks ago, but the pollsters said the Democrat's lead appeared to be solid.

During the Queens tour, Mr. Buckley returned again and again to his chief theme—that Mr. Moynihan favored big government and big spending while he was "fighting to restore government to the people and to get government off their backs and out of their pockets."

To dramatize that theme, he made his first at the home of Raymond J. Duryea, a truck driver who earns $14,100 a year, at 302 Onderdonk Avenue, Ridgewood. He told Mr. Duryea and his wife, Angela, and Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Signorello, who were visiting them, that a typical taxpayer in Mr. Duryea's bracket would pay about $3,300 more a year in taxes if programs advocated by Mr. Moynihan were approved.

He said these programs, including a federal takeover of welfare and a national health insurance, would increase Federal spending by about $152 billion a year.

Mr. Buckley was given a cordial reception during fast-moving, walking tours of Woodhaven, Richmond Hill, Sunnyside, Astoria and Bayside. Much of it was friendly territory represented in the State Legislature by Republicans elected with Conservative support.

Mr. Buckley, who ended his long campaign day with another attack on Mr. Moynihan in a speech at the Queens Federation of Civic Councils dinner, who endorsed yesterday by a group of Roman Catholic priests who have formed the Concerned Clergy for Buckley Committee.

In a statement signed by nine of them, they praised his stand on abortion, tax deductions for private education, help for the elderly and welfare reform.

Representatives of the State Pharmaceutical Society have met with spokesmen for the Departments of Social Services, Health and Budget to give the reasons for a growing boycott by druggists in at least eight counties. The Social Services Commissioner, Phillip Tom, said in a statement after the meeting that a demand for a $3 fee has been turned down because of the state's fiscal problems.

25,000 Bicycle Carrier Seats

And 427,000 Pacifiers Recalled

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15 (UPI)—The Consumer Product Safety Commission announced today the recall of 25,000 bicycle carrier seats for children and about 427,000 baby pacifiers that it said were dangerous.

The bicycle seats have been involved in 10 accidents, none of them apparently serious. They were sold countrywide under the trade name "Tote Along."

The commission said that if the seats were not installed properly, they could whip loose from the bicycle frame, dumping the child to the ground. They were manufactured by the Hamill Manufacturing Company, Washington, Mich., for Burtman Manufacturing Company, Dayton, Ohio.

The recalled pacifiers are 306,792 DOLAX brand and 119,588 OLLA brand, all of which sold for about 45 cents each. While no injuries have been reported, the commission said, the two brands were designed in such a way that children could swallow them and choke to death.

Sanitation Profits

Garbage-collection costs piling worker productivity appear to be a New York City problem that it was ready to try a solution.

City Mayor John E. Zuccotti's experimental plan under which motivated garbage-collectors would be set up in teams. Workers would be encouraged to improve their job habits by collecting, re-independently, contracts with

The "first stage of implementation" is under discussion with the sanitation union, the Deputy Mayor says, as part of a new collective-bargaining agreement.

The president of the Uniformed Sanitationmen's Association, John J. DeLury, is less enthusiastic. "I don't want to make any comments on idiotic suggestions," he says of the plan. "It's not even going to see the daylight."

Nixon Era Novels

Two novels that were part of the literary fallout of the Richard M. Nixon Era—Spiro T. Agnew's "The Canfield Decision" and John D. Ehrlichman's "The Company"—made debuts last May. The Agnew book received what the trade calls "mixed reviews," while the Ehrlichman effort won mainly favorable notices.

Follow-Up on the News

Both books have been selling well, their publishers report.

Playboy Press says 60,000 copies of "Canfield" have been wholesaled and paperback rights have gone to Berkeley Publishing. No movie offers, reports Mr. Agnew's agent, Scott Meredith.

Simon & Schuster says it has shipped 67,000 copies of "The Company," with paperback rights sold to Pocket Books and film rights to Paramount.

Urban Gardening

It isn't often that the United States Department of Agriculture can help the big cities, but last spring Congress allocated $1.5 million to the department to encourage gardening in the metropolises.

"The money has just become available," says Edwin L. Kirby, administrator of the Agriculture Department's Extension Service. It will be used, he explains, in "a three-year pilot effort to demonstrate what can be done in helping low-income urban residents to produce some of their own food."

Six cities are eligible for funds, Mr. Kirby says: New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Detroit and Houston.

In New York, Dr. Eugene Ezerzsky, who will coordinate the program under

Fred Fisher

It was a moment of high drama in the 1954 Army-McCarthy hearings. Senator Joseph R. McCarthy charged that a law-firm associate of Joseph W. Welch, special counsel for the Army, had been a member of the National Lawyers Guild "long after it had been exposed as the legal arm of the Communist Party."

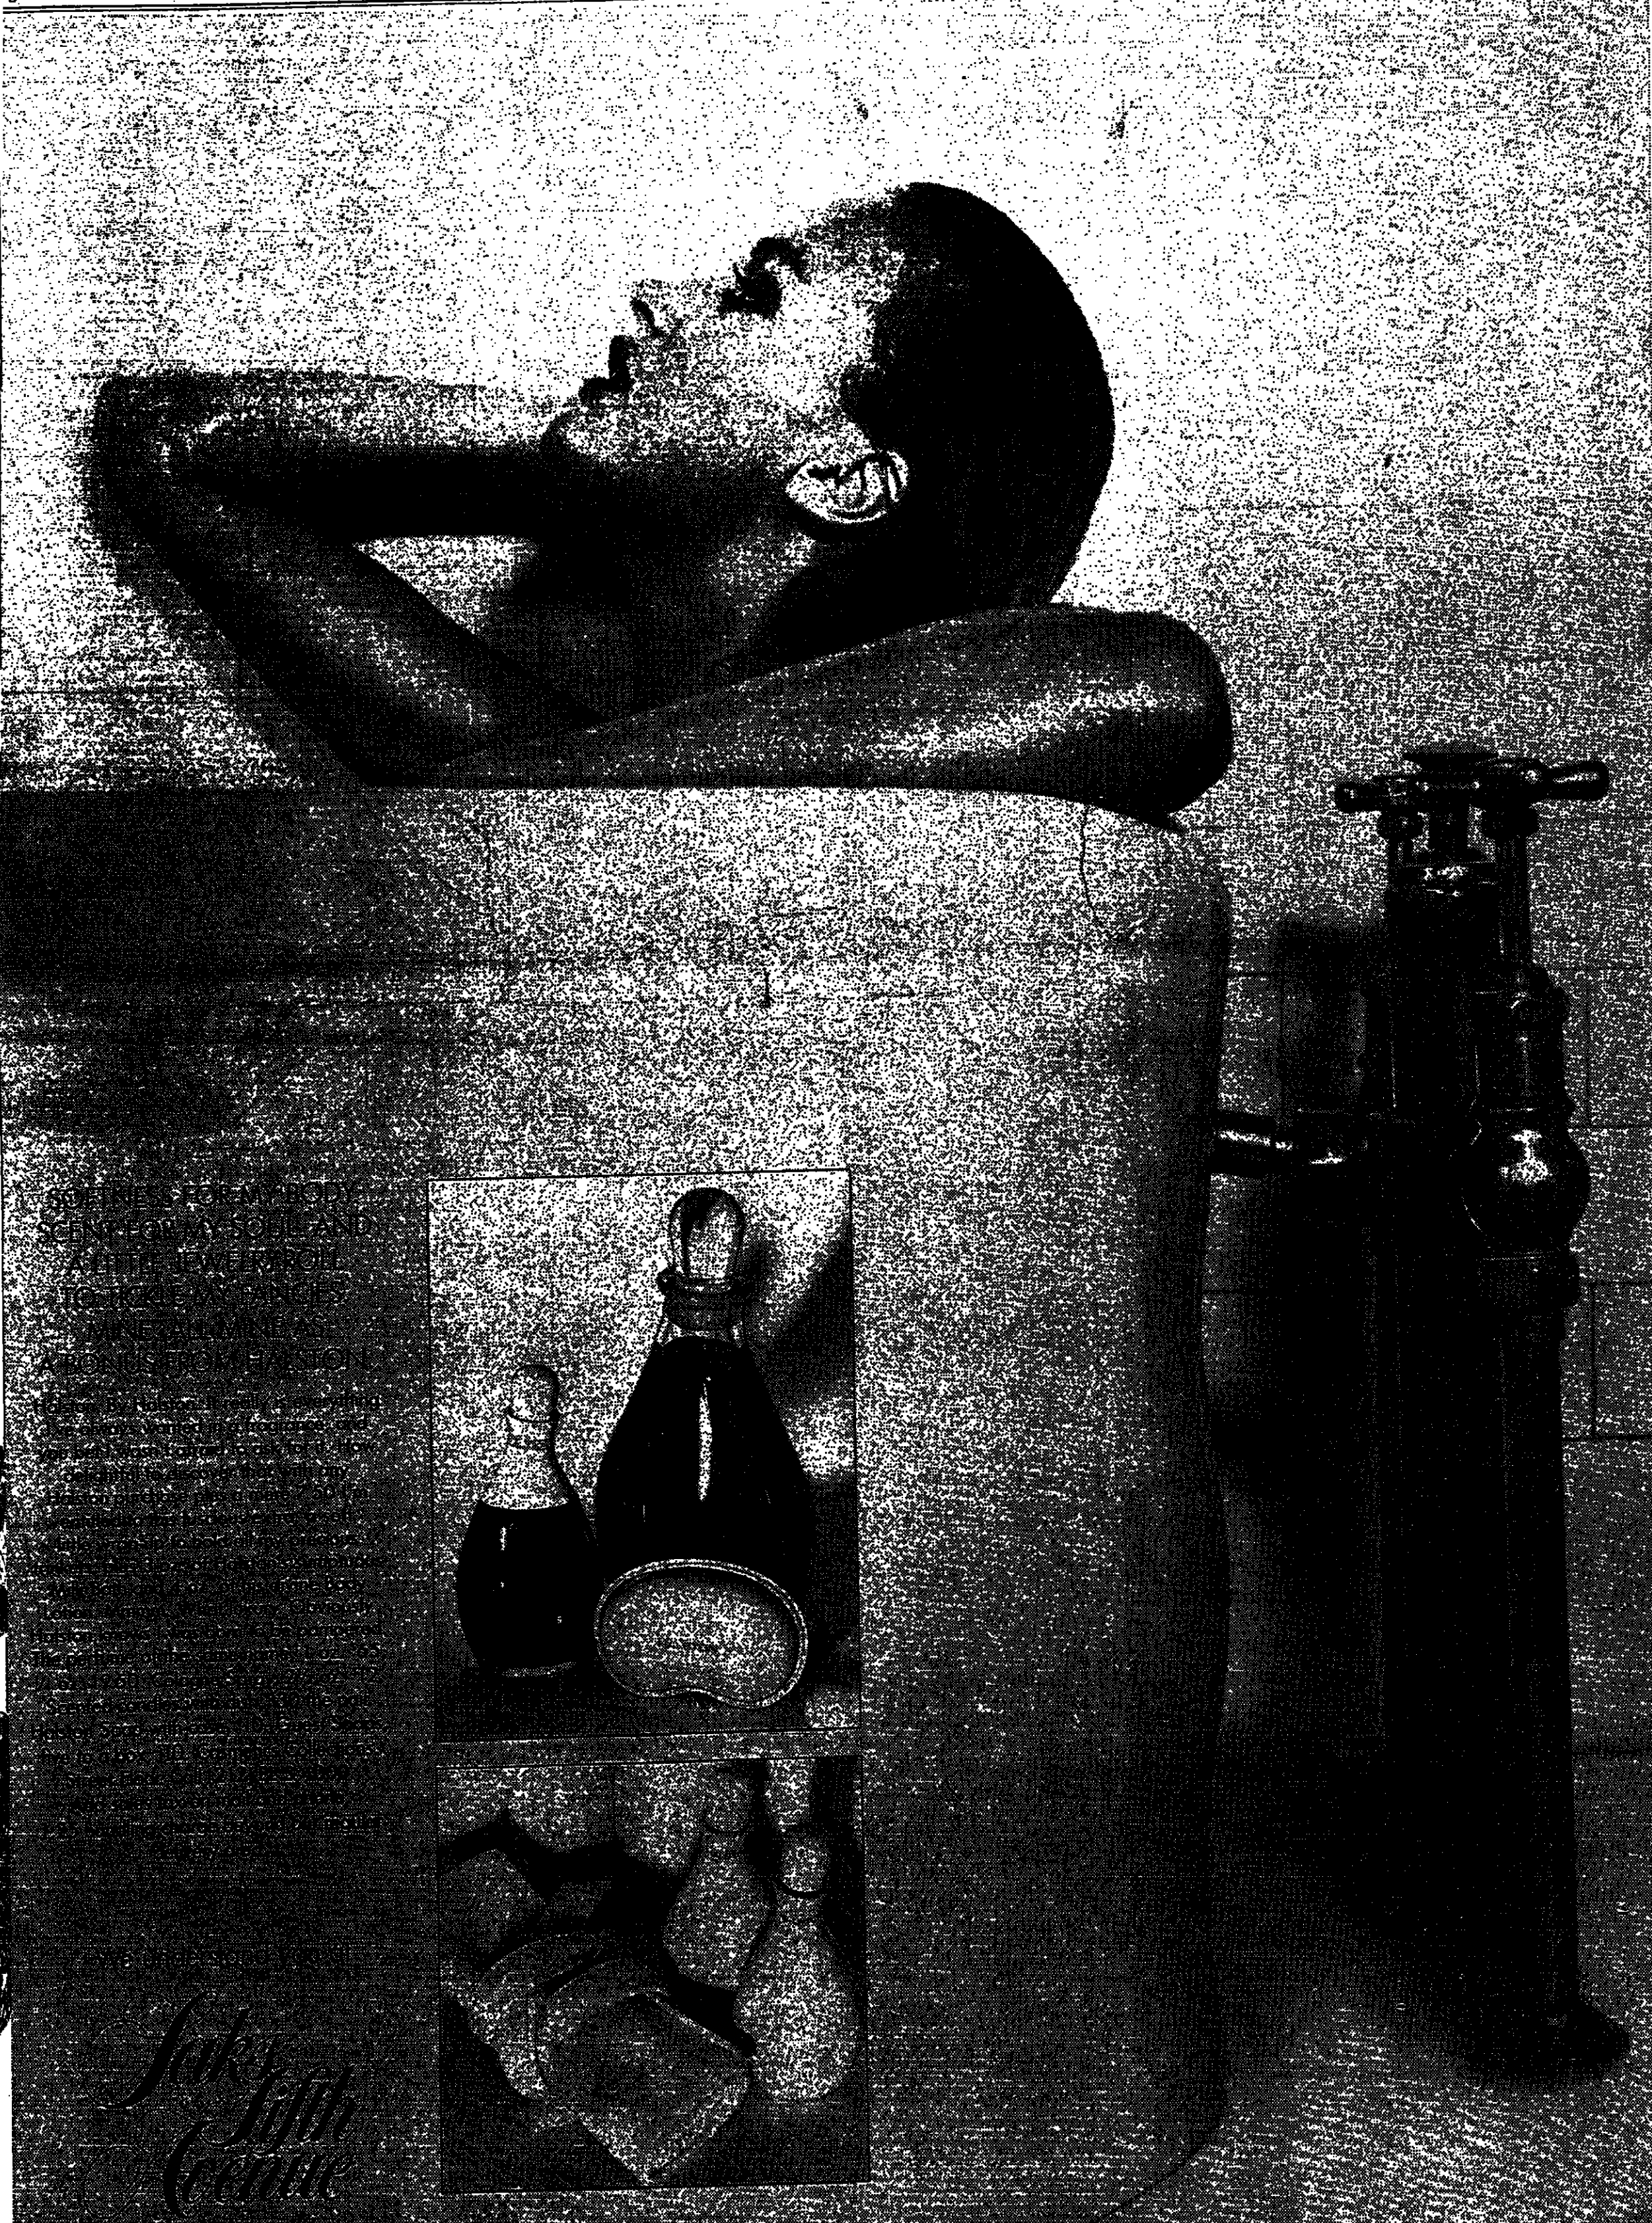

The associate was Frederick G. Fisher Jr., who had privately acknowledged to the firm his membership in the guild while at the Harvard Law School "and for a period of months after." The guild was not on the Attorney General's list of subversive groups, but it had been cited as a "Communist front" by the controversial House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Close to tears that June 9, Mr. Welch told Mr. McCarthy: "Until this moment Senator, I think I never really gauged your cruelty or your recklessness. Fred Fisher is starting what looks to be a brilliant career with us. . . I fear he shall always bear a scar, needlessly inflicted by you."

Does he?
 "No, no, I don't," the 55-year-old Mr. Fisher says in Boston. He is a senior partner now in that same law firm, Hale & Dorr, and over the years he has held high office in the Massachusetts Bar Association and American Bar Association. He specializes in corporate law.

Woman Is a Sailing Commodore

STONINGTON, Conn., Oct. 16 (AP)—"I have found that in this life you have two choices," says Nancy Gibson, the second woman commodore in the history of the National Ensign organization. "You can take on too much or do too little. I prefer the former."

And her life reflects that preference. She was recently elected to head the 35 sailing boats of Ensign Fleet 34, based at Fisher Island. That fleet is one of the largest in the United States, covering an area from Watch Hill to New London.

The Ensign is a full-keel, one-design sailboat. "It's a fabulous boat," according to Commodore Gibson. "I've been out in 30-knot winds. It's a good stable boat."

Her group, the Ensign Class Association, was founded in 1962 and includes 46 active member fleets.

Commodore Gibson is also editor of The Ensign, a 1,000-circulation magazine for Ensign owners. And she acts in little theater groups in Stonington and Westerly, R.I. She won an O'Neill award for stage set design.

"I like anything creative—needlework, painting—and I lay bricks—I laid the terrace," Commodore Gibson said.

She also designed the trailer to transport her Ensign.

"I didn't do the welding, but bought the frame from Lady Bea and put it together and adapted the design to the Ensign hull," she said.

Her start in sailing was piloting a Cape Cod Baby Knockabout in Waquoit Bay on the south shore of Vineyard Sound, Cape Cod. She was 9 years old then.

Her husband, J. Merrill (Gib) Gibson II, also sails. Being on weekend call as a surgeon gave him little time for sailing this summer, but he has acted as crew for his wife. Both are from Providence, R.I. Their three sons—Jesse, 25; James, 24; and Jonathan, 21—also sail.

York State Panel Decries the Inequities in Taylor Law Penalties

JAMON STETSON
 State's Public Employment Board handed down a stiff week for last fall's illegal New York City teachers. At the same time, it expressed concern that the law does not provide a "standard" in the imposition of checkoff.

"That any statutory penalty should be uniform in its application to all employee organizations is a state," the board said.

In the case of Teachers of the City of New York, the board stripped dues deduction privileges from 108 of those cases, found no penalties warranted in four, and dismissed or authorized withdrawal of such charges in 19 cases. The remaining cases, it said, are pending.

The suspension of checkoff for the teachers and also last week for the Bridge and Tunnel Officers Benevolent Association, representing toll collectors for the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, raised the total number of suspensions to 110.

"We make no judgment," the board said, "as to whether there should or should not be penalties for strikes of public employees or, indeed, whether such strikes should be legal, as they are in some states. Neither do we make a judgment as to the form or scope that penalties should have."

although it acknowledged that the checkoff penalty would have a serious impact upon the union's financial resources. (Dues, collected at the rate of $190 a year from 60,000 members, total $11.4 million a year.)

"We are also concerned," the board said, "that the administrative machinery provided by the [Taylor] law does not insure a standard of evenhandedness in the imposition of the statutory penalty of forfeiture of dues deduction privileges."

Lacks Jurisdiction Here

"This board lacks jurisdiction to deal with strikes involving public employees of mayoral agencies of the City of New York, and of the other 13 local governments which currently have a mini-P.E.R.B. [a local employment relations board set up similar to the state board and in substantial conformance with the Taylor Law]."

"Public employee organizations that strike against such agencies may have their dues-deduction privileges suspended only by a court, and then only as punishment for contempt of the court's order."

The board pointed out that 18 strikes by such employee organizations had occurred since the advent of the Taylor

Law, but that there had not been any suspension of dues-deduction privileges of the striking organizations in any of these walkouts.

By contrast, the board said, there have been 135 charges filed against employee organizations deemed responsible for strikes that were subject to the jurisdiction of the state board.

The board reported that it had, earlier suspended dues checkoff privileges in 108 of those cases, found no penalties warranted in four, and dismissed or authorized withdrawal of such charges in 19 cases. The remaining cases, it said, are pending.

The suspension of checkoff for the teachers and also last week for the Bridge and Tunnel Officers Benevolent Association, representing toll collectors for the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, raised the total number of suspensions to 110.

"We make no judgment," the board said, "as to whether there should or should not be penalties for strikes of public employees or, indeed, whether such strikes should be legal, as they are in some states. Neither do we make a judgment as to the form or scope that penalties should have."

The fact that penalties were not applied uniformly did not provide a basis for imposing a lesser penalty in the teachers' case, the board said, since the statute does not grant that discretion. But the board said it did feel compelled to bring the inequity to the attention of the Legislature for whatever remedy it might consider appropriate.

The 18 strikes by employees of mayoral agencies for which there were no checkoff penalties were all in New York City, a board spokesman said. These included past strikes by police officers, firemen, sanitation workers, hospital workers, bridge tenders, clerical employees and others. In some of these penalties other than the loss of checkoff were invoked for union violations of temporary injunctions forbidding strikes.

The Office of Collective Bargaining, which administers city representation, mediation and impasse procedures, does not have the right, as does the state board, to suspend the checkoff or impose other penalties. Arvid Anderson, director of the office, said that he did not feel that his agency, which attempts to play a neutral role in the mediation and resolution of disputes, should have the power to impose penalties.

Medicaid and Blue Cross Saving Millions on Excess-Bed Penalties

Penalties for excess bed capacity by hospitals throughout New York State have enabled Medicaid and Blue Cross programs to avoid spending $6.5 million over the last two years.

The savings estimated by the state's Health Department under its cost control program were cited by the Community Service Society. The group made public last week a report urging a new nationwide system linking advance rate-making with management aids to cut hospital costs, which rose 13 percent last year to $47 billion when all nonmedical prices rose only 6.8 percent.

Susan S. Laudicina, author of the report, said hitherto unpublished data from the Health Department had shown 4,365 hospital beds closed during 1974 and 1975 under a state law setting penalties and decertification of beds when occupancy falls below annual minimum levels.

The closings listed by the department included 3,005 medical-surgical beds, of which 2,125 were in New York City municipal hospitals; 871 pediatric beds, including 216 in the city system, and 489 obstetrical beds, including 117 in the city institutions.

In addition, the budget squeeze led to a complete closing of the municipal Francis DeLafield Hospital, with 231 beds, in August 1975.

The state-set minimums have called for 80 percent annual occupancy for medical-surgical beds, 70 percent for pediatric beds and 60 percent for obstetrical beds. Mrs. Laudicina reported these requirements would probably be increased by 5 percent in 1977.

The Community Service Society report contended that hospital waste and inefficiency could be ameliorated by a "prospective reimbursement" system. In this, Medicaid and insurance reimbursement rates are set in advance, rather than paid on costs already incurred.

But the report stressed that the system should "combine financial pressure with technical assistance to produce a cost-conscious environment."

The proposal would have the Federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare supervise and fund state agencies that would review hospital budgets for a coming year, detecting any excessively costly services by use of productivity guidelines.

Hospitals would be required to use a uniform accounting system. The budgets would be set for three-year periods, with automatic adjustments in second and third years to cope with inflation.

Alvin L. Schorr, the civic group's general director said the study by its committee on health had looked into prospective reimbursement programs in 22 states, involving about one-fourth of the hospitals in the country.

The aim of the plan is to encourage hospitals to contain costs by reducing the number of cases treated, limiting patient stays and increasing productivity.

Urging use of a hospital's entire budget or departmental budgets as the basis of payment, the study contended reimbursement on patient-day bases—as in New York State—may cause some hospitals to prolong stays.

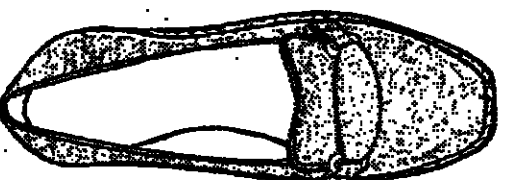

In the first five years of the New York State cost-control program, the study said the average hospital stay had remained considerably higher than in the nation as a whole. Average patient hospital stays throughout the country decreased from 8.2 to 7.9 days from 1970 to 1974, the study said, while New York actually saw an increase from 9.7 to 9.8.

Law in Jersey Threatens Parents Of Truants With Jail Sentences

VENTNOR, N.J., Oct. 16 (AP)—Truants here could find their parents making up for their lost class time—in jail.

Ventnor school officials say their get-tough approach to truancy has cut the absentee rate dramatically.

No parents have gone to jail yet. But two students, who had missed 44½ and 28½ days last year, are in class regularly after their parents faced jail sentences if they missed more classes.

"We've never had to send someone to jail, and I hope we won't," said School Superintendent Chester Ogden. "But at least the rule is there and it seems to work."

About 350 students from this shore town attend nearby Atlantic City High School. If Ventnor school officials hear their students are absent for a number of days, an attendance officer makes a visit to the student's house.

Steps in Disciplinary Program
In the case of truancy, Mr. Ogden reported, "The parents say, 'I didn't know it' and 'We'll take care of it.'"

However, if the absenteeism continues, parents are called in for a conference with Mr. Ogden. If that fails, parents are given a legal notice ordering them to make sure their child goes to school.

Then, if the student still plays hooky, parents must go to Municipal Court for an informal hearing with the judge. And if that fails, school officials file a formal truancy complaint.

Mr. Ogden said that about four cases went that far last year. In one case, the Municipal Court judge imposed a jail sentence for five weekends on the parents, with each weekend sentence suspended if the student went to school that week. The student showed up.

Mr. Ogden explained that the law, part of the city's parental-responsibility ordinance, applies to any student, regardless of age.

Students may quit school or be expelled at the age of 16, Mr. Ogden said, but they may not be truant if they are still in school.

Part of a Broader Policy

The truancy crackdown is an outgrowth of another tough school policy started here two years ago.

If a Ventnor student fails three or more courses, which means being left back at Atlantic City, the school board offers to pay for two summer-school courses. However, if the student refuses to sacrifice his summer vacation, the cost of a make-up year goes to the student's parents and Atlantic City charges Ventnor about $1,400 for each student at its high school.

"It's simple," Mr. Ogden said. "If they don't want to go to summer school, we say, 'All right, we're not going to pay for your tuition next year.'"

When the program began, school officials said that about 90 Ventnor students were failing three or more high school subjects. Now, with the threats of parents going to jail or paying their child's tuition, school officials say, truancy and failures are way down.

Shaw Estate's Literary Adviser Quits Over Dispute With Agents

By ISRAEL SHENKER

Dan H. Laurence, literary adviser to the George Bernard Shaw estate, and for the last 17 years editor of Shaw's "Collected Letters," has resigned both positions after what he termed "unresolvable differences" with the estate and Shaw's literary agents.

"The estate, not having any understanding of scholarship, is interested only in money," he charged in an interview. "They overturned decisions I'd made, and complications got to the point where I couldn't go on."

Principal beneficiaries of the estate are the British Museum, Britain's Royal Academy of Dramatic Art and the National Gallery of Ireland, none of whom relish publicity in this matter. Also benefiting, as Shaw's literary agent, is Britain's Society of Authors.

And then there is the Shaw academic advisory committee, whose advice is mysterious and whose makeup is anonymous.

Shadow-boxing in this ring, Mr. Laurence became increasingly frustrated. His work on Shaw's letters held fire for 13 months while he sought replies to his own letters.

Four years have gone by since publication by Dodd, Mead of the second of four projected volumes. The third volume would take Shaw up to 1925, when he won the Nobel Prize for literature. Volume Four would include letters illustrating Shaw's care in drawing up his will, and more examples of his idiosyncratic and breathtakingly honorable way of dealing with publishers and the world of letters.

Shaw's primary bequest was for censure of a 40-letter alphabet, but more vocal beneficiaries managed to have that bequest invalidated. Another bequest for a Shaw bibliography appears to have been invalidated as well.

In 1963, the estate barred publication of Shaw's diary, transcribed from Shaw's shorthand and annotated by Prof. Stanley Rypins, formerly of Brooklyn College. Since Shaw's death, in 1950, his estate has come into about five million pounds, thanks largely to "My Fair Lady," the musical version of Shaw's "Pygmalion"—a project Shaw opposed.

Though aware of these ironies of will, Mr. Laurence in 1970 gave up his tenured professorship at New York University and moved to Austin to be near the large Shaw collection at the University of Texas. Last year his seven-volume definitive edition of Shaw's plays was published in New York. He is currently a visiting fellow at Pennsylvania State University.

"I'd be embarrassed to tell anyone what I've earned in 17 years' work on the letters," he said. "Anything I received for the edition got plowed back into the edition."

In describing his financial trials and his failures in getting cooperation to bar premature publication of letters, Mr. Laurence spoke of a situation reminiscent of Dickens (red tape of "Bleak House," "Circumlocution Office" of "Little Dorrit") and of Gilbert and Sullivan (farce).

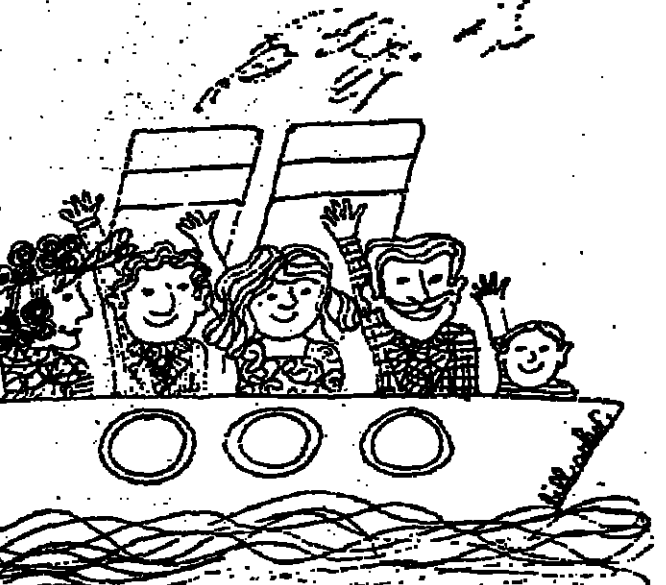

He acknowledged elements also of Shakespeare's "Comedy of Errors," as when he inadvertently mailed notice of his resignation to the Times Literary Supplement (London).

It has now been published there routinely, without benefit of negotiation or delay. The estate has rejoined with expressions of regret at Mr. Laurence's resignation, and at his public airing of same.

Moynihan Is Still Trying to Patch Things Up With Blacks, Liberals

By FRANK LYNN

Barely two weeks before the election, Daniel P. Moynihan is still mending fences with two of the more important elements of the New York State Democratic Party—black and liberal Democratic officials who still have their doubts about his positions on civil rights and liberalism. Mr. Moynihan met with the Council of Black Elected Democrats two weeks ago and his campaign manager, Sandy Frucher, huddled with David Dinkins, chairman of the council, last Thursday.

The discussions centered on what has been called Mr. Moynihan's "black problem" stemming from his criticism of black Third World caucuses in the United Nations, his writings on the breakdown of black families and his "benign neglect" memorandum as a Nixon administration aide, which he said referred to a toning down of racial rhetoric but which others interpreted as a call for a slowdown in civil rights legislation.

"It should be very clear to him that he has a negative position among blacks and only he can alter that," said Mr. Dinkins, who is also New York City Clerk, in explaining why the council has not endorsed Mr. Moynihan. "There have been no signals" from Mr. Moynihan since the earlier meeting with the black officials, Mr. Dinkins added.

"We're sending up signals," said Mr. Frucher. He said that Mr. Moynihan was preparing a statement on South Africa as well as planning street campaigning in Harlem and attending a church in the South Bronx. A preliminary signal was the endorsement of the Senate candidate yesterday by State Sen. Joseph Galiber, a black and chairman of the Bronx Democratic County Committee.

Mr. Moynihan is also "sending up signals" to the liberals. The New Democratic Coalition, the umbrella organization for many liberal, so-called reform and anti-organization clubs, has declined to endorse Mr. Moynihan because of his service in the Nixon and Ford administrations and his hard line on defense and the Soviet threat.

To counter this view, the candidate met with some 15 liberal Democrats, including a half-dozen Assemblymen, mostly from Manhattan, at a room in the Americana Hotel after the Liberal Party dinner Thursday evening.

He heard complaints that he seemed to be more interested in the B-1 bomber than in social-welfare programs and that he was still running against the liberal wing of the party as he did in the primary. Mr. Moynihan talked at length but apparently didn't convince.

"I'm not voting for Buckley but I'm not going to beat the bushes for Pat Moynihan," said one of those at the meeting, Assemblyman A. B. (Pete) Grannis of Manhattan. However, Mr. Grannis added the bottom line, probably for both the liberal and black officials.

"He's going to win with or without our help."

State chairmen of the political parties are usually heard not seen. But not so Richard M. Rosenbaum, who is the most visible Republican state chairman in many years.

Mr. Rosenbaum, for example, escorted President Ford in the metropolitan area for two days last week delivering a speech at nearly every stop and upstaging Senator James L. Buckley, who is running for reelection Buckley, and presumably could use the exposure, as well as the state's senior Republican Senator, Jacob K. Javits. The two Senators had to settle for brief bows.

In fact, Mr. Rosenbaum served as a personal escort for members of the Ford family four days in a row—Jack last Saturday in Westchester, Mrs. Ford in Buffalo on Sunday, Steve Ford on Monday in the Columbus Day parade here and the President Tuesday and Wednesday. Several weeks ago it was Susan Ford in the Steuben Day parade. Next target: Mike Ford who has not campaigned in New York yet but is expected to.

What is Mr. Rosenbaum running for? Governor, he has hinted in the past. Federal judge, said some Ford aides last week.

Governor Carey's order for an emergency audit of the financial records of Erie County is highly significant on at least two counts. Edward V. Regan, the Republican County Executive, is often mentioned as a prospective Republican gubernatorial candidate against Mr. Carey in 1978.

In addition, Mr. Regan has been making a major issue of the impact of welfare costs on local taxes and could be responsible, at least in part, for the poor showing of Jimmy Carter and Mr. Moynihan in two Buffalo Evening News polls—the latest last week—of the usually Democratic county. President Ford and Senator Buckley are running well ahead of both Democrats in the county, the poll indicates.

It's official. Vice President Rockefeller and Senator Buckley have made up, at least for now. Mr. Rockefeller contributed $1,000 to the Buckley campaign recently.

Up until now, he had kept his checkbook closed as far as the Senator was concerned because he was very unhappy about Mr. Buckley's refusal to endorse President Ford before the Republican National Convention and, indeed, as the Senator's participation in a conservative move to undercut the Ford strength at the convention by pushing Mr. Buckley for President.

$534 Million in Projects Proposed To Desalinate 2 Southwest Rivers

FORT SMITH, Ark., Oct. 16—This Arkansas-Oklahoma border city on the Arkansas River has become the focal point for the planning of a major attack on "natural pollution."

Representatives of government, business and agriculture from the two states met this week with officials of the Army Corps of Engineers to coordinate a drive to construct projects costing more than $534 million to divert the relatively clean waters of the Arkansas and Red Rivers around huge salt deposits.

They heard Senator Henry Bellmon, Republican of Oklahoma, predict that President Ford will sign the Water Resources Act, paving the way for construction on the projects to begin before 1980, possibly within two years.

15-Year Project Foreseen

The desalination of the two rivers that flow through parts of Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas is expected to take 15 years from the start of construction on the first project, provided normal funding patterns are followed by Congress.

The salt deposits—remnants of the huge sea that covered this part of the nation thousands of years ago—provide about two-thirds of all the pollution in the two rivers. In the Arkansas alone, more than 15,000 tons of salt are carried downstream each day, making the water unusable for municipal, industrial or agricultural purposes. Most of the salt fields through which the rivers flow are in Texas and Oklahoma.

Senator Bellmon, the leading advocate of rechanneling the rivers around the salt areas, warned that failure to move ahead with the projects could result in drastic harm to both national and world food supplies.

He noted that the rivers flow through the Dust Bowl of the Depression era—an area of Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas that is fertile farm land today because of irrigation made possible by deep wells. These wells, however, can be expected to begin drying up before the turn of the century, he said. And without usable irrigation water, the farms could again become fallow.

Additionally, rapidly developing cities (Tulsa, Fort Smith and Little Rock) and industries in western Arkansas will be deprived of economical supplies of needed water if the salt is not removed from the river, the Senator said.

Approximately $9 million in Federal funds have already been spent on planning the various river diversion projects, which are mainly in Oklahoma and Texas. The Army engineers are now in the process of developing a new cost-benefit report on the projects.

This study is expected to increase the dollar benefit from a previous study that indicated an average annual benefit to farmers, industries and cities along the Arkansas River of about $46 million a year.

The Water Resources Act generally shifts responsibility for approval of funding for the desalination projects from the White House Office of Management and Budget to Congress.

A major appeal for construction fund appropriations to Congress is expected in March. This will involve various groups in all five of the affected states.

Those attending the two-state conference here this week also were informed that a number of officials of the Environmental Protection Agency, which is concerned with removing manmade pollutants from rivers, have voiced support for the desalination projects. Participants indicated cooperation of the E.P.A. could be a major asset in getting the massive antipollution effort under way.

Gains and Problems Cited in Plan to Give Hospital Privileges to All Qualified Doctors in New York

Hospital leaders see benefits to both physicians and patients in a proposal by the new Health Systems Agency in New York City to admit "all qualified physicians" to hospital privileges. But they also note problems and question whether there is much demand by unaffiliated physicians for such opportunities.

Dr. John L. S. Holloman Jr., the president of the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation, estimated last week that perhaps 10,000 of the city's 24,000 physicians might lack hospital connections. Joseph T. Lynam, the executive director of the federally mandated Health Systems Agency, put the estimate at "about one-third."

Joseph V. Terenzio, the president of the United Hospital Fund of New York, declared: "If all the physicians in the city had hospital privileges, it would be good for them to have exposure to teaching and advances in medicine, and the hospitals help to police the quality of medical care."

Imposition of the recommendation would be up to the State Health Department.

The municipal hospital system has been studying the admission of private physicians to its facilities for more than a year. So far, it has approved pilot programs in Harlem and Bellevue Hospitals.

At Harlem, these involve obstetrics and gynecology, for which 20 private physicians have won approval to affiliate and 15 patients were brought in from the first week of August to last week.

The opportunity has also been given in the pediatrics department, but no private physicians have yet applied. At Bellevue, 20 beds in all services are to be available to private physicians with a starting target of Nov. 1.

The corporation board last September adopted 13 principles as interim guidelines for any private practice in the municipal hospitals. These require that the private physicians become members of the medical staff and be "obligated to provide voluntary services" despite their unsalaried status. They would also have to carry their own "personal malpractice insurance."

Laymond Robinson, spokesman for the municipal hospitals, said they had seen "no real interest on the part of private physicians or patients" to come into old wards containing 20 to 30 patients.

But now, Mr. Robinson said, Harlem, Bellevue, Lincoln and North Central Bronx Hospitals are among the city's newest buildings—with Woodhull to open next year—all including private and semiprivate rooms, so he foresaw more interest.

Albert J. Conway, the executive vice president of the Catholic Medical Center of Brooklyn and Queens, said he would be "delighted if it could ever be achieved" for all physicians to have hospital connections.

Mr. Conway, like others, stressed that examination of a doctor's credentials would be vital. But he doubted that all doctors would want to take hospital affiliations, because they would also be obligated to work on medical boards and committees and devote some time to outpatients.

The Health Systems Agency's report said the expanding of admitting privileges would "provide for a continuity of care that is now missing whenever an unaffiliated physician is unable to follow a patient into a hospital or to be involved in the planning of post-hospital care." It suggested hospital stays might be shortened.

"It is clear," the report said, "that physicians with no attachment to hospitals lose an important opportunity for continuing education and maintenance of professional skills, and that one important stimulus to the scrutiny of peers."

Dr. Lowell E. Bellin, Services Administration, religious discrimination, been one reason why never got hospital privileges.

Hospital beds, Dr. Bellin sent "a certain amount of physicians as a result of others" sending in patients.

Mr. Terenzio said hospitals to consider each physician and perhaps limit what allowed to do to stay of the Joint Commission of Hospitals. Dr. Bellin they might have to work period.

THE 1976 UNITED NATIONS PEACE MEDAL

Minted in solid 18 karat gold and in solid sterling silver. Available as a medal and as a pendant.

All orders for Proofs must be postmarked by United Nations Day—October 24, 1976.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 24, IS UNITED NATIONS DAY—the international anniversary of the ratification of the United Nations Charter.

Each year the United Nations honors that historic Charter and its high purpose—the quest for lasting world peace—by issuing its annual Peace Medal.

The face of the 1976 Peace Medal bears a finely sculptured design of an olive branch in an open hand—timeless symbols of peace—and the reverse portrays the official seal of the United Nations in the same open hand. The medal is also inscribed with the word PEACE in the five official languages of the UN: Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish.

The 1976 United Nations Peace Medal is being minted both in solid sterling silver and in 18 karat gold for official presentations by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to heads of state and other leading dignitaries. It is also being made available in Proof and non-proof editions for collectors.

Strictly limited Proof Edition

Hallmarked First Edition Proofs, struck both as medals and as pendants, are available for only a very limited time. Orders for Proofs can be accepted only if postmarked by United Nations Day: October 24, 1976.

Each Proof will be specially minted from hand-finished dies so that the frosted image stands in sharp contrast to the brilliant mirror-like background. Each medal will be accompanied by a custom-designed stand for display on desk or tabletop. Each pendant will be housed in a handsome presentation case and will be accompanied by an appropriate neckchain.

The total Proof Edition, including the small number of presentation medals struck for use by the Secretary-General, will be permanently limited to the exact number of Proof medals and pendants ordered by October 24th. After that date, the 1976 United Nations Peace Medal and Pendant will be available in non-proof versions only. All orders should be sent directly to the minter—The Franklin Mint, Franklin Center, Pennsylvania 19091.

Haitians Who Fled to U.S. Suing For Asylum as Political Refugees

Special to The New York Times

MIAMI, Oct. 16—One night this week, a 28-foot-long sailboat with 13 Haitians and two Americans aboard, which apparently had left the Bahamas, entered Biscayne Bay and docked in a residential area of this city.

The 15 were promptly taken into custody by Immigration and Naturalization Service officers. A day later, the Americans were charged with violations of the United States Code that prohibit bringing undocumented aliens into the country. The legal status of the Haitians—two men, five women and six children—is still undetermined.

Their I.N.S. files were added to those of more than 2,000 other Haitians who since 1972 have been attempting to enter the United States, almost all of them by boat to Florida, and who have been waging a legal battle to remain as political refugees.

The efforts of Haitians, who receive modest financial support from the Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches, have not been successful so far. The State Department and I.N.S., which make the administrative decisions on asylum petitions, have consistently denied their requests for political refugee status.

The two agencies share the view that the Haitians are "economic" rather than "political" refugees and that as such they have no right to political asylum.

About 500 Haitians are now seeking judicial review of their final orders of deportation or exclusion.

The most important of the litigations is now pending at the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, in New Orleans. In it, 216 Haitians ask the court to set aside deportation orders confirmed by lower courts.

The petitioners argue that the United Nations protocol on refugees, of which the United States is signatory, creates an absolute right against return of bona fide refugees to the country of origin. They contend that under the protocol they should be entitled to the protection of the due-process clause of the Fifth Amendment, which they say is not offered by the present administrative asylum procedures.

Having declared themselves political refugees here, they tell the court, they would be subject to prosecution by the Government of President Jean-Claude Duvalier of Haiti, which they describe as dictatorial, if they were forced to return home.

The court's decision, expected early next year, could have far-reaching consequences. A ruling in favor of the petitioners, legal experts believe, could open the doors to the United States to tens of thousands of people, whose claims for political asylum, like those of most Haitians, could be based on the contention that there is little difference between economic and political hardships.

"We feel that any relaxation of the rules could produce a flood of economic refugees from all over the Caribbean, where virtually every government has serious socioeconomic and political problems. It could conceivably also apply to Mexicans who illegally cross the border," said Edward T. Sweeney, district director of the immigration service here.

A Miami lawyer, Donald L. Bierman, who, with his law partner, Neal R. Sorenson, has represented many Haitians for years, believes that fairness is the issue.

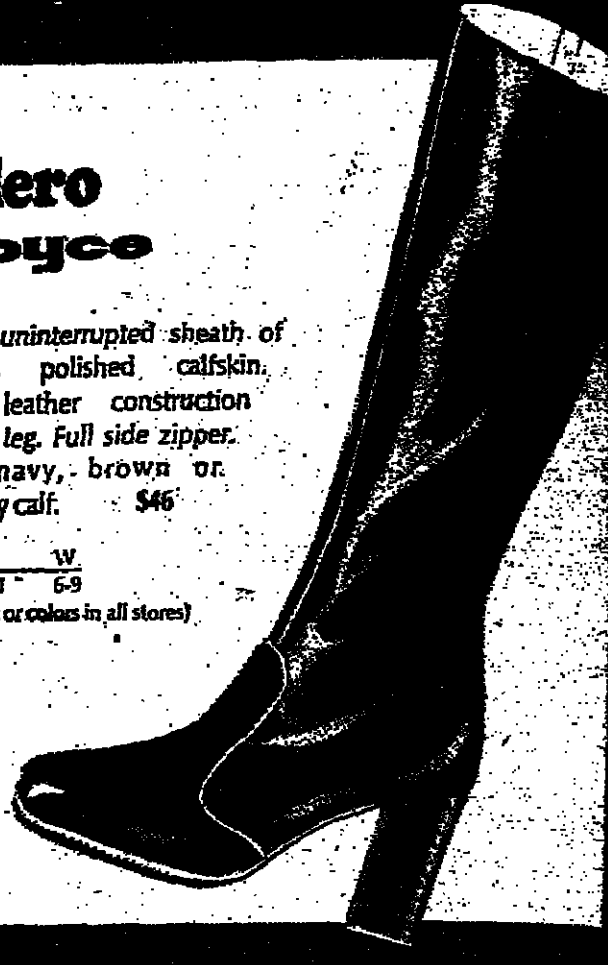

"The treatment of Haitian refugees by the Ford Administration has been unconscionable when compared with that of the Cuban refugees," he said. "The Government has spent over $1 billion on Cubans. We don't ask for one penny. We ask for equal rights for these people. We also question whether the fact that our clients are poor, black and fleeing from a right-wing government that is 'friendly' to us is the reason for this extreme treatment."

An investigation by a subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, which published a report on Haitian emigration last July, said that the Department of State had made little effort to verify asylum claims by Haitians here.

Taxi Union Lists Contract Demands

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

Officers of the New York taxi drivers' union last week that drivers would expect higher wages and improved fringe benefits in a new contract to supplant the three-year agreement that expires Nov. 16.

In a meeting with the members of the Metropolitan Taxicab Board of Trade at the Prince George Hotel, Donald F. McEnagh, counsel to the Taxi Drivers Union of 30,000 drivers, outlined the general goals of the union's representatives.

He described the mood of the drivers, who faced high living costs, as hostile. "Wages and other benefits will have to be increased if a confrontation is to be avoided," Mr. McEnagh said. "The industry rates that drivers earn $180 a week, including tips."

Despite the 17.5 percent rise in fares approved by the city to help meet the cost of the contract reached in August 1974, recent costs exceeded the fare rise, the owners said.

They also pointed out that their application to the Taxi and Limousine Commission for an additional 7.5 percent increase in fares had been rejected last January.

$3.75 a Day on Day Shift

In 1974, taxi fares were set at the present 65 cents for the first sixth of a mile and 10 cents for each additional sixth.

Before that, the fare rates were 60 cents for the first fifth of a mile and 10 cents for each additional fifth.

Under the present contract, drivers earn $3.75 a day on the day shift and $4.60 on the night shift. They get commissions ranging from 43 percent to a maximum of 49 percent, depending on how long they have worked for a company.

The drivers also won earlier and increased pensions, paid holidays and days of sick leave in their present contract.

Owners Cite Rising Costs

He also stressed that the drivers did not want the negotiations to drag out, as they did two and a half years ago for months, before a settlement was reached in the face of a threatened strike. On their part, the representatives of 55 fleets—who own 3,400 of the more than 11,000 medallion cabs—replied that the cost of cabs, parts and gasoline risen sharply.

That's current, typical and adds immeasurably to our understanding of education today?

FIRST ISSUE

LIMITED EDITION PROOF OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND PURE GOLD

(Illustrated 1 1/2 times actual size 18 mm)

$35 PER PROOF

In 1976 The International Monetary Fund (IMF) of Washington, D.C., a specialized agency of the United Nations, made a historic decision to release, for the first time ever, some of its gold holdings. A limited portion of pure IMF gold (24K, the purest available) will be minted into a FIRST ISSUE-LIMITED EDITION PROOF. This piece will be the first ever issued and certified as being from pure 24K International Monetary Fund Gold.

SOLID PURE GOLD

To honor the IMF's momentous monetary decision and its 1976 meeting in Manila, Philippines, the Philippine Numismatic and Antiquarian Society (founded in 1929) has appointed The Columbia Mint to mint its Official First Issue-Limited Edition Proof using pure (.995) solid gold obtained from IMF's gold reserves for this purpose. The Proof will measure 18 mm in diameter and contain 48 grains of pure 24K gold; the front will honor the IMF (as illustrated above); the reverse will carry the Official Seal of the venerable Society.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY

A First Edition Minting is a rarity. As a strictly controlled Limited First Edition, we believe that this Proof commemorative honoring the IMF's historic decision will be sought after by knowledgeable collectors throughout the world.

A LIMITED EDITION

Because of the limited amount of IMF gold available for this minting, it is likely that not everyone wishing to acquire this Proof will be able to do so. Therefore, The Society has ruled that all orders be filled in the strict sequence in which they are received. Once the limit has been reached, or on December 31, 1976, whichever occurs first, the final minting will take place. The minting dies, never to be used again, will be retired by The Society and a record of each purchaser's name will be placed in its archives in Manila.

HISTORIC MINTING

Rarely in the history of minting have Limited Edition Proofs been issued in 24K solid pure gold. Since IMF gold is so pure, a rare occasion is available for a limited number who act promptly. Each Proof will come in its own special presentation case and will be accompanied by a certificate of authenticity attesting to the First Issue Limited Edition status and the gold content of pure (.995) 24K IMF Gold.

ACT NOW!

Due to the unique circumstances of this offering, the Mint reserves the right to withdraw this offer at any time. You will be guaranteed to receive your order at the price of $35 each, plus $3 each for handling, providing you use the Official Order Form below and it is received before the First Issue minting limit is reached or before December 31, 1976, whichever occurs first. Any order received too late to be accepted will be returned along with the remittance. Act now while this opportunity is before you and send your order to the Society's Official Minter—The Columbia Mint, 1735 New York Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

Tweed should have received a maximum sentence of one year, the historian says. Judge Noah Davis sentenced him to 13 years.

Rearrested on Release

When the Court of Appeals ruled unanimously that the maximum sentence should not have exceeded one year, Tweed was rearrested almost immediately after his release from jail, on indictments for which he was never tried. The $1 million was raised to $3 million. He died in jail in 1878, at the age of 55, after being returned from Spain, where he had fled.

Professor Hershkovitz writes that to guarantee conviction of the Grand Sachem of Tammany Hall in 1873, after the first trial ended in a disagreement—with most jurors probably for acquittal—the prosecution intimidated and tampered with witnesses and thoroughly pre-screened the panel from which a jury would be selected.

He says that, in addition, the prosecution arranged with Gov. Samuel J. Tilden to get a handicapped judge biased against Tweed.

"Tweed was never tried or found guilty of graft or theft, the crime Tweed stands accused of by history," says the historian who discovered many warrants and vouchers ignored by earlier writers. "He was convicted after some strange, improper, even illegal judicial proceedings, which were, in many ways, worse than anything Tweed supposedly committed."

Quote Is Disputed

In his book he disputes some allegations that have been repeated so often they are accepted as fact. For instance, many writers of the Tweed period have said that when Tweed was questioned about alleged depredations of the city, as exposed by The New York Times, he replied: "What are you going to do about it?"

gandist" who could have been purchased much more cheaply.

Challenging accepted writings about Tweed, the professor writes:

"Tweed was, and is, a convenient stick to beat the city over the head with, preferably at regular intervals. In many ways, the tragedy of New York is that Tweed did not succeed, that a strong unified political force was not created. The paper tiger was not real."

Middle Name in Doubt

To demonstrate how historians and other writers have meekly rewritten one another, with little new research, he cites the fact that they did not even know Tweed's full name. He is almost always referred to as William Marcy Tweed and the middle name is supposed to have been bestowed upon him in honor of the Jacksonian Democrat, William Marcy, who became Governor of New York and is reported to have coined the expression: "To the victor belongs the spoils."

The author writes that the middle initial, M, almost certainly stood for Magear, the maiden name of Tweed's mother. Tweed's son and grandson were baptized William Magear, he adds.

There is no question, writes the professor, that one of the main reasons the press went after Tweed so eagerly was because he was a spokesman for immigrants and most New York newspapers of that period were strongly prejudiced against immigrants.

For instance, he says, James Harper, of Harper Brothers, the publishers for whom Nast worked, had once been elected Mayor of New York City on the Native American ticket, which was built on hatred of immigrants, particularly Irish Catholics.

Questions on Ancestry

At times, he points out, the press suggested Tweed was Irish, sometimes that he had some Jewish ancestors. Tweed was born in New York City, as was his father, and was very probably of Scottish descent. He was a Protestant and was buried with an Episcopal service.

Contrary to the prevailing opinion that Tammany Hall was omnipotent, Professor

"The Tammany Boys Whipped Out of Their Boots," a Thomas Nast cartoon published after "Boss" Tweed's defeat at the polls in 1871.

Hershkovitz shows it was so weak that elected officials were rarely able to succeed themselves and the leaders of Tammany were constantly fighting.

Referring to the power that earlier historians referred to as the power of Tammany, he writes:

"Tweed did not dictate to or control the legislature. Politics was a complicated, obscure business requiring a careful and sensitive hand. Tweed was never able to ram legislation through; he was not a ringmaster at a circus, but rather one of the performers, an important one, perhaps, but still a performer."

Professor Hershkovitz contends that Tweed was also hounded because most newspapers here strongly favored the Republican Party at that time and a cause to overshadow the corruption of the Republicans in New York during the Grant Administration.

A Different Picture

On the basis of research into warrants, vouchers and ledgers, and trial record, he concludes that what has been written about Tweed in the construction of Courthouse, behind City Hall, and "cal rnetoric," and that Tweed from jail was not so much a briber but of desperation when he realized he would never get a trial.

In Tweed's favor, the author says that the politician was "tasteful, modernizing, governmental and national institutions; in developing reforms in public welfare, advancing the establishment of and hospitals; in preparing the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Prospect Park, removing fences, public parks; annexing the former owner of the creation of New York helping build the Brooklyn in founding Lenox Library, which a keystone of the city's public system, and in establishing River and Drive.

"Tweed's concepts about urban and accommodation, while not fully formalized, were years before time," he writes. "Twenty years later, such programs were by reformers and urban planners was a pioneer spokesman for an ing New York, one of the few who for its interests, one of the few who could have had his voice heard in Albany. Tweed grew with the death was a tragedy for the metropolis.

"His life in the end was so much by what he did, but by what he did, his work and the he relegated to the garbage heap branded by the same inebriated became a club with which to beat New York, really the ultimate goal of the reformers."

High Court Review Sought in Case Involving Jobs for Longshoremen

By DAVID F. WHITE

Dockworkers and ship-industry employers are expected to ask the Supreme Court early this week to review a Federal appeals court ruling that struck down labor-management arrangements designed to protect longshoremen's jobs in the face of the development of container shipping.

The appeals court ruling has already been the subject of intensive negotiations between the two parties on how to replace the invalidated "container rules." It also has aroused the concern of many maritime leaders here who say that if the longshoremen lose work because of the decision, port commerce may suffer as well.

"If the court knocks down the container rules," said a shipping industry source, "we're going to have one hell of a serious, complex problem."

"The best thinking on protection will be gone," he said, adding that both the International Longshoremen's Association and the Council of North Atlantic Shipping Associations fear the recent court decision could provide a precedent for developments in five other Atlantic ports where they represent management and labor.

The issue has grown out of a June 29 decision by the United States Court of Appeals in New York, upholding a National Labor Relations Board ruling that certain provisions of the container rules violated the National Labor Relations Act.

The action challenging the rules was brought by two companies that load and unload consolidated shipments, after shippers that employed them were assessed for damages under the provisions of the container rule. The rules cover the rights of longshoremen to handle a wide variety of containerized cargoes as well as safeguards to protect that work.

According to Anthony M. Scotto, a vice president of the I.L.A. and president of its Brooklyn Local 181, the union—which has seen its work here dwindle from 44 million manhours in 1964 to 19 million manhours today—cannot afford to lose more work.

"There isn't much more we could lose; we're at the bone right now," he said. Industry sources here have expressed fear that if the longshoremen lose more work as a result of the June 29 decision, this would force an increase in the tonnage assessment of $6.85 levied here in New York City on most kinds of cargo.

The assessment is used to pay dockworkers' guaranteed annual income, medical benefits and other contract benefits.

The union itself says it wants more work, not increases in the assessment.

Attorneys for one of the two concerns that brought the action have maintained that the two would be "literally wiped out" if the container rules are allowed to stand and that they have been used by union and management to try and take over work never done by longshoremen.

Retirement Leaves Only One Commodore in U.S. Merchant Marine

By WERNER RAMBERGER

Commodores in the American merchant marine, especially with the disappearance of United States-flag passenger shipping on the East Coast, are getting scarcer than pearls in an oyster. And one of them, Capt. Leroy J. Alexander of United States Lines, has just "swallowed the anchor," thus leaving to Capt. Russell McDow of Farrell Lines the distinction of being the only active merchant mariner of flag rank in this area.

As for Captain Alexander, the one star that went with being a Commodore isn't the only one he can wear. He is also a retired Rear (two star) Admiral in the United States Naval Reserve.

Captain Alexander, who is 66 years old and lives in Great Neck, L.I., had mixed feelings the other day about being permanently ashore after having spent 46 years at sea.

"There is enough to keep me busy, but altogether it's sort of new, and it will take a bit of time to get adjusted to being a landlubber," he said.

He started his seagoing career in sail as a cadet at the old New York Merchant Marine Academy, now the State University Maritime College at Fort Schuyler in the Bronx.

New York Maritime in 1930, when he graduated and got his ticket as a third officer, had a seagoing campus, the old U.S.S. Newport, a barkentine.

He was in command of the superliner United States on her last trans-Atlantic crossing before the world's fastest passenger liner was taken out of commission in November 1969.

Since then he has been in command of cargo ships, his latest the container ship American Legion.

Asked to compare being a luxury liner skipper with serving as master of a cargo ship, he said:

"It's a question of dimensions. On the 'Big U' I was responsible for close to 3,000 people, 2,000 passengers and 1,000 crew, and the job called for considerable social contact with passengers.

"On a freighter you only have a crew of 40 to worry about and you have a lot more time to yourself, to unwind and to read."

Concern has been expressed by the maritime industry over President Ford's recent veto of a bill to implement this country's obligations under the Convention on the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1972.

The convention calls for a major revision of what is popularly known as the Rules of the Road, ship traffic-safety regulations observed uniformly throughout the world.

The possibility that the United States may not subscribe to the convention is of particular concern to the port here because of the substantial volume of coastwise traffic by ships of all nations in the Boston-Norfolk sector.

This traffic, which moves in international waters, could, unless this country ratifies the convention, move under two different sets of traffic rules.

Mr. Ford vetoed the measure in Dallas on Oct. 10 because he found a provision of the bill—empowering either the House or the Senate to block amendments to the convention by merely passing a resolution of approval—"incompatible with an express provision in the Constitution."

"That a resolution having the force and effect of law must be presented to the President and, if disapproved, repassed by a two-thirds majority in the Senate and the House."

Mr. Ford also noted that the bill as it was written would involve Congress directly in the performance of executive functions in disregard of the fundamental principle of separation of powers.

Mr. Ford strongly urged the 95th Congress to pass the measure early next year. The convention, with, or without United States adherence, goes into effect next July 15.

One of the lesser-known aspects of harbor life has just received its due in a book entitled "Tugboat," published last week by Macmillan Publishing Company Inc.

It was written and photographed by David Plowden, who did his research and his pictures taking aboard the Julia C. Moran. He notes in his preface:

"The book shows a typical day in the life of a harbor tug boat, although many months were needed to get all the photos."

The Julia, incidentally, has received the rare United States Department of Commerce Gallant Ship Award for the role she played in a 1966 crash involving two tankers.

It costs less to take a harbor tour on a sightseeing yacht, but at $7.95 a copy "Tugboat" appears to be worth the difference since it affords the reader an opportunity to view the harbor from an unusual angle.

Injects New Cast Members Puccini's 'Il Trittico' Trilogy

By RAYMOND ERICSON

repertory production to be by the Metropolitan Opera evenings during its opening season was Puccini's "Il Trittico" given on Friday night. In its form it was new last despite debatable features, holding over.

cornell MacNeil as Michele, the barge owner, again gave a brooding, authoritative performance, his baritone sounding as freshly soporific as ever.

Another first was Fedora Barbieri's appearance as the Princess. The veteran Italian mezzo was not ideally cast in the part; her personality is too robust for this forbidding straddled soprano.

Two debuts also marked the "Gianni Schicchi," with Josella Ligi and Neil Schicoff appearing as the young lovers, Lauretta and Rinuccio. The Italian soprano is an attractive artist with a pleasant voice, which lacked the sweetness at the top expected in Lauretta's music.

Miss Barbieri joined the cast as Zita and had a good time gesticulating in proper fashion. Also new was another returning Italian veteran, Italo Tajo, a wonderfully funny bearded-eyed doddering old Simone.

James Levine conducted. By holding down the volume, he was more considerate of the singers than he sometimes is. At the same time he had the orchestra convey the special atmosphere of each part of the trilogy most eloquently.

Hay's Dances Use Signals
ral problem for choreographers in the 1960's was to move without slavishly imitating their predecessors.

performance prior to evolving her own direction, and then offered her current work as a demonstration of her immediate interests.

The dancing itself is slight and not complex, but derives its force from the concentration with which it is presented.

The mood of the two dances she presented was serene and affirmative. The bulk of the first consisted of small turns and graciously moving arms while the second had yogalike configurations.

Les McCann

Les McCann Disowns Jazz for His Message

In the 16 years since Les McCann came to prominence, the pianist and singer has been an anomaly in the jazz world. Although he has shown an eclectic style as a pianist, he has sometimes been dismissed as merely a funky cocktail pianist or, more often, he has gained more attention with his murmuring pop style as a singer than for his work on piano.

At Hopper's, at the Avenue of the Americas and 11th Street, where he is currently performing with his quintet, he disowns any interest in jazz. His purpose, he says, is to get across his message of love and peace.

Music: National in New Works

By ALLEN HUGHES

The National Symphony Orchestra of Washington and its music director, Antal Dorati, must have had the feeling that the Big Apple was in serious need of some new music.

This was apparently a bit much for some members of the sparse audience, a number of whom seemed to be inexperienced concertgoers and went in and out of the hall during the performances as though they were in a movie house.

Of the three works, Schuller's Concerto was far and away the most interesting for this listener. It is an essay in sonata form, and Mr. Schuller, who knows the orchestra inside and out, has assembled a batch of intriguing ones in this time.

Music in Review

Valentin Hirsu Plays Cello With Modesty, Artistry

Valentin Hirsu, who recently arrived in New York from his native Rumania and became a new member of the Philharmonic's cello section this season, made his solo debut last Sunday afternoon in Carnegie Recital Hall.

On the basis of this concert Mr. Hirsu proved to be a cellist of high professional caliber with a solidly grounded technique, a rather lean but clearly focused tone and a musician of a thoughtful, even introspective bent.

Elaine Greenfield's Debut On Piano Is Admirable

It's refreshing to hear a young pianist present a debut recital of the sort given by Elaine Greenfield last Sunday afternoon in Carnegie Recital Hall. Not only was the choice of music well-balanced and unchancey, but each piece was admirably tailored to the pianist's capabilities and temperament.

Miss Greenfield, who lives and teaches in Vermont, possesses a formidable technique that she uses more for intimate expressive purposes than for flashy surface effect.

Vincent Fraioli Performs Unusual Guitar Sequence

Vincent Fraioli, a 23-year-old guitarist from Providence, R.I. gave a debut recital in Carnegie Recital Hall on Thursday night that refreshingly scrambled the traditional chronological order in which the music is played.

in a couple of ways. His fingers did not respond as nimbly as they should have on some quick figurations, which was not serious. More to the point was a certain blandness in the performance, which disappeared partially as the recital went on, and one would hope, would be eliminated entirely as the guitarist matures.

A Joffrey Trio In 'Fanfarita,' Arpino Work

"Fanfarita," as this column noted eight years ago, is not the name of somebody's little Mexican granddaughter. It is the title of a short, snappy Spanish-tinted pas de trois by Gerald Arpino.

When the ballet was created in 1968, it was very obviously a vehicle for the classically trained Spanish dancer Luis Fuentetaja, and it still is. Friday night at the City Center, at the Joffrey Ballet's performance, Mr. Fuentetaja strutted and whirled through this crowd-pleaser with panache and bravura.

There is a storehouse of virtuosity for all terribly meaningful. "Fanfarita" is the kind of ballet that does not make you think; it makes you smile.

At times it seems a parody of itself; at other times it is a straightforward showpiece. There is, for instance, a plethora of pirouettes, and all these cast members are natural turners.

Another Arpino ballet on the program was "Drums, Dreams and Banjos," conceived as a tribute to Stephen Foster.

The structure in this revised version is more straightforward. The fantasy sequences that seemed interpolated now seem more convincing, and the rousing minstrel-show finale saves the show.

122 New Yorkers stayed at the Sheraton-Maui last month and loved it.

First of all they loved the clear, sunny tradewinds weather. Then they were right on the beach, on Maui's miles of golden sand, looking out at the blue Pacific and breathing the sweet Maui air. With tennis, great golf, sailing, and a whole beautiful Neighbor Island to explore.

There were also quite a few New Yorkers at the romantic Sheraton-Kaui, on Kauai's beautiful Poipu Beach, enjoying the sea, the sun, the fabulous scenery. And some people visited both.

With 'New' Etiquette, Kindness Counts

By DEE WEDEMEYER

Letitia Baldrige recalls that one Washington hostess was so determined to carry out etiquette rules that call for alternating men and women at a dinner table that she was once seated between an ambassador with halitosis and a 14-year-old boy.

That will change if Miss Baldrige has her way, and she may. She is negotiating with Doubleday to revise the late Amy Vanderbilt's etiquette book, which was last changed in the 1972 edition, two years before the author's death.

Miss Baldrige has been retained by the publishers since January to work on the project, which is tentatively scheduled for publication in spring, 1978.

Lincoln Clark, Miss Vanderbilt's son and an executor of her estate, said discussion about selecting a new author had taken more than a year and that 25 to 30 people were considered before Miss Baldrige was selected.

"My mother worked to revise the book virtually every year, and every time the book was printed there were changes," Mr. Clark said. "That was the philosophy she worked to achieve and I think she would want it."

He said he was not concerned about Miss Baldrige changing such ideas as his mother's opposition to the term Ms. "I use it all the time," he said. "You have to remember that when my mother was writing it was four years ago."

Author of Five Books

Miss Baldrige was social secretary to Ambassador and Mrs. David E. B. Bruce in Paris; social secretary at the White House when Jacqueline Kennedy was First Lady and assistant to Ambassador Clare Boothe Luce in Italy. She is president of her own public relations and marketing firm in New York; has written a syndicated etiquette column since September and is the author of five books, including most recently, "Juggling: The Art of Balancing Marriage, Motherhood and a Career." She is married to Robert Hollenstainer, a real estate developer. They have two children.

In an interview in her office on Third Avenue, Miss Baldrige said she would retain portions of the book relying on Miss Vanderbilt's "marvelous" research into such rituals as formal weddings, funerals and formal dinner parties. She said that she saw herself as observer of modern living styles and as such would shift through common contemporary practices to include ones she found appropriate and exclude those she found rude.

"My basic philosophy is 'Kill them with kindness,'" she said. "My term is Real Manners with a capital R, capital M, which has nothing to do with calling cards or white gloves but with kindness. I would never say this is what you have to do, I would say this is what's nice to do."

Among the things it is nice to do, according to Miss Baldrige: use the term Ms.; seat two women together at a dinner party rather than beside an inappropriate man; send cut flowers, a flower arrangement or a plant instead of a corsage; shake hands with casual acquaintances rather than kiss cheeks; ask a recovered alcoholic, "What would you like to drink?" just as the host or hostess would ask any other guest.

Helping on Thank-you Notes

Letter writing will get a boost from Miss Baldrige, who does not approve of telephoning to thank a hostess for dinner. (Miss Vanderbilt did, except for large dinner parties where the host or hostess might be inundated with calls.) Telephone calls arrive at inconvenient moments, said Miss Baldrige, who prefers a handwritten note.

"I have everyone writing a letter every hour on the hour," she said, throwing her head back and laughing.

Furthermore, she suggested, bridegrooms should help write thank-you notes. But she said unmarried couples should not share the same notepad.

"That's for married people," she said. "That's one of the things they get to do together."

Unmarried couples living together, she said, should be treated as a single entity socially. When they visit parents, however, she said parents' rules on such matters as separate bedrooms should be followed.

On Dealing With Caterers

Another thrust of the book will concern the behavior of men and women in the business world, she said. She suggests women avoid clunky jewelry, lewd T-shirts or flamboyant makeup and avoid using four-letter words. "It shows a lack of self-discipline and caring about themselves," she said. "Until things are really even-Stephen, it sticks out twice as much for women."

Miss Baldrige said information on

"I would never say this is what you do. I would say this is what's nice to do. I would say this is what's nice to do. Letitia Baldrige, who has been to revise Amy Vanderbilt's book on..."

Kasper's version of peasant look

Peasant— And Pleasant

By BERNADINE MORRIS

At a dinner party in New Orleans, a department store buyer was being harangued by a guest on the absurdity of the peasant look in Paris. Nothing to do with life today... who wants to dress up like an East European... nobody could wear it... and what did the buyer, a fashion authority, think about all the fuss?

The buyer surveyed the woman, who was wearing a smock-like blouse with a drawstring neckline and a puffy silk skirt and said, "You're wearing something very much like it."

What is passing for peasant these days is any kind of full skirt, with or without petticoats, and a loose top that's tucked into the waistband. It's not exactly what is worn in the fields anywhere in the world, but it's a pleasant look, eminently flattering to women with small waistlines. Problem: hips can also vanish into the folds of the big skirt.

It's already turning up at parties in New York as well as in the Deep South, as an alternative to clingy jersey dresses or tunics and pants. Ohrbachs had a best seller this fall in a ruffled taffeta skirt which sold for $36 and a printed blouse to go with it at $27. Some women who know how to sew have put similar looks together for even less money.

"I bought five yards of taffeta for $20 and I made a marvelous skirt to wear to a wedding," said a woman from Long Island.

Other stores have been selling versions of the full skirt and blouse for a couple of hundred dollars, and the trend is not likely to fade away too quickly.

Many designers have offered their interpretations for the Thanksgiving-to-New Year's holiday season in the north along with cotton eyelet dresses to be worn partying in southern resorts. The cotton eyelet styles are usually in white, and they're not meant for plowing either. Actually, the homegrown crop of peasant styles is pretty regal.

what a butler should do would be included in the formal entertainment section; she also plans to include material on dealing with catering services and informal entertaining at home.

"Relaxed entertaining does not mean improper use of the easy way out," she said. "Paper plates are for outdoors. If you do not have enough chairs, you borrow. There are certain things that don't change and you never use plastic flatware. When you have guests on a picnic, you just bring your stainless steel from home."

Young people will also be covered, ranging from college men (who, she said, are not good about replying to invitations to debutante parties) to 4-year-olds (who she thinks know how to behave at a party). "A 4-year-old," she said, "is able to eat without spilling milk cup around. He should get through a party without going on the floor. He should be able to say thank you at the party and, if he is giving the party, he should be able to say, 'You didn't bring me presents.'"

By age 7, she said, children should be able to write thank-you notes. "I've written up and down the page it is only five words. Thank the party," she said. "The thing practice and it will carry them through. I am absolutely adamant. I am

Explicit Violence Overwhelms Every Other Value On the Screen

In the very first sequence of "Scorchy," an inept, mindless little melodrama about cops and narcotics smugglers, one hoodlum corners another, sticks the muzzle of his revolver into the victim's mouth and says, "You talk too much." There was a time when the camera discreetly glanced away at that point. No, the hoodlum pulls the trigger in "Scorchy," appears to have moved in closer, the better to show a man looking at the back of his head. His brains smear the camera lens.

"Grizzly," an unabashed copy of "Jaws" that features a rampaging bear instead of a shark, shows us a man's arm being ripped off and a horse being decapitated. In "The Omen" David Warner is very efficiently decapitated before our eyes and Lee Remick, who plays the devil's mum, is tossed out a window to her death. In "Burnt Offerings," a dad, played by Oliver Reed, is tossed out a window to his death, landing face down, his head pushing through the windshield of the car where his young son is waiting for him, the child thus being appropriately splattered with glass and dad's remains.

And on it goes, in films made by gifted, intelligent people as well as by hacks. Violence, which, I suppose, is the sensation most easily communicated by films, may not be more prevalent today than it ever was in movies, but because the means by which it is represented have become increasingly graphic, it begins to dominate all other circumstances. Are audiences so bloodthirsty that they demand this realism, or are they simply bored?

Each of us has a different tolerance for screen violence, a tolerance that varies according to the mood of the viewer and the content of the film containing it. Because I found Sam Peckinpah's "The Wild Bunch" a serious and moving film about the last days of the western frontier, I accepted without question the so-called "blood ballet" that concluded the film. Yet the violence in the same director's "The Straw Dogs" was intolerable—the film itself was so simple-minded that the climactic mayhem and murder looked to be nothing more than an exercise in brutality.

Serious artists can argue persuasively that violence is a metaphor for our times, but serious artists need serious audiences, and when I saw a screening of "The Wild Bunch" at a Times Square theater, where the audience hooted and howled with pleasure at the blood-letting, I must admit to having had some reservations about my earlier defense of the picture. Are the audiences at Loew's State 1, who cheer and laugh during some of the roughest moments of "Marathon Man," reacting to a metaphor or to violence as style? The latter, I suspect. After all, violence—including the dental torture that provides "Marathon Man's" most terrifying sequence—may be defined as nothing more than an extreme form of rudeness, and rudeness is more or less how New Yorkers live.

Because "Marathon Man" is a beautifully acted and directed thriller, I find its violence bearable. Yet in more and more films like "Scorchy" and "Drum" and "Lipstick"—movies made without any art and with no purpose except to shock—violence of the graphic sort that is now possible becomes the point of the movie, instead of a means to some other end. This is what separates today's violent films from those of earlier decades (the 1930's gangster films) that were in their own times thought to have gone too far. Explicit violence is as much the point of a film like

The Playwright Cannot Attend

By ROBERT BERKOVITZ

When "Poor Murderer" opens on Wednesday at the Barrymore Theater, its author, Pavel Kohout, probably will not be in the audience. The Czech playwright—a leading cultural figure at home—has tried but thus far failed to obtain his government's permission to attend the first Broadway performance of one of his plays.

Actually, Kohout (pronounced Kohoot) has never seen "Poor Murderer" performed on any stage. He is, for political reasons, a dramatist non grata in Czechoslovakia. Kohout continues to live and work in Prague, where he is known as a poet, screenwriter and dramatist, but his plays cannot be published or performed there or anywhere else in his native land. So, even though Kohout is permitted to receive income from foreign productions of his work—"Poor Murderer," for example, has been performed in Germany, Belgium and Greece—he is denied the more important artistic satisfaction of seeing his writings come alive for himself and his countrymen.

"Poor Murderer" is set in St. Petersburg, now Leningrad, at the turn of the century. The scene is a psychiatric clinic, and the action stems from the dramatic efforts of the clinic's star patient, a famous actor, to prove himself sane and therefore capable of standing trial for murder—presumably a self-defeating course. Layers of reality and unreality are peeled away until the end as to the nature of both the criminal and the crime.

The actor's anguished cry is the play's key: "Have I pretended insanity to get away with a murder, or did I murder because I am insane?" According to Kohout, the play is based on a short story by the Russian writer, Leonid N. Andreev. In a statement about the play's inspiration, Kohout wrote: "What did I, who until now had tried to reflect my time and my world—find so fascinating in that old, non-well as the message of the movie. Marco Ferreri's "The Last Woman," which begins as a brilliant satire on male supremacy, concludes with its hero making amends by using an electric carving knife to cut his penis on camera. Nagisa Oshima's "In the Company of Men," the Japanese film that was named Best Foreign Film at the New York Film Festival, is a study of the just ended New York Film Festival, with its heroine, who has loved her lover to death, based on the Marquis de Sade's "The 120 Days." A Minority Report on 'Porgy'

I feel like the snake in the Garden of Eden, like Scrooge at Christmastime, maybe like King Canine ordering the sea to roll back. About a week ago I went to see "Porgy and Bess," which in its revival by the Houston Grand Opera at the Uris Theater has been universally received as the greatest thing since "Le Nozze di Figaro." If there has been a dissenting voice I have not come across it. Gershwin's opera, now presented complete with the original recitatives, has been hailed as a masterpiece on all sides. But, with all the good will in the world, all I could experience were some pretty songs, few and far apart, connected up by a libretto full of stereotypes, with a phony and sentimental ending that makes a cheap assault on the emotions, and by music that has no connective tissue at all.

It is hard to understand the sanctified position that not only "Porgy and Bess" but Gershwin himself holds in Broadway and American musical annals. He is accepted as a master, and it is all but un-American to criticize him. Of course the man did have a clever, brittle, superficial talent. He wrote some nostalgic tunes throughout his career, and in that Tin Pan Alley milieu he may have been supreme. The trouble with Gershwin is that he was ambitious and had big ideas that his talent could not begin to encompass. When he tried for something big, the results could be as puerile as his paintings. Gershwin spent a lot of time before his easel, turning out derivative, tight, pretentious oils—an equivalent in paints of what "Porgy and Bess" is in music. There is something basically false about "Porgy and Bess." Virgil Thomson was right the first time around (later he changed his mind). The libretto is fake and the music is fake. The libretto invents a never-never land called Catfish Row and populates it with crap-shooting, watermelon-toting black stereotypes who in moments of stress fall on their knees and start shouting spirituals. In the past, blacks

Bergman in Exile

By BERNARD WEINRAUB

MUNICH—Ingmar Bergman has quietly decided to settle in Munich. The film director says that the theme that obsessed him in the past—the quest for God amid despair and emptiness—has disappeared, and he yearns to make films about ordinary people and realistic, straightforward relationships. He says he will never work in Sweden again. "No, I will not go back to Sweden," says Mr. Bergman, who left the country last March after charging that he was harassed by tax authorities and suffering a nervous collapse. "It has to do with my most private feelings. It has to do with my feelings of humiliation, of dishonor. Perhaps it's crazy but it's just that way."

The Blood And Bombast Of 'Tamburlaine'

snuffe, an unstoppable, overwhelming surge of unvarying iambic pentameter. It is like spending an evening being run over by some outrageously persistent Centurion tank. The play is vast, majestic, and exceedingly monotonous.

Even Tamburlaine's love for Zenocrate, the princess whose fellow-citizens he offhandedly exterminates, does nothing to humanize him. Clearly, then, much depends on the actor chosen to play this grim warlord. He must inject some variety, some complexity, into the part, or the audience will totter away with nothing to show for its ordeal except battle-fatigue.

The omens were not altogether good, since the mantle had fallen on Albert Finney, who has force, size and charisma, but has sometimes been criticized for lack of range and uniformity of delivery. In fact, he confounds the faithful, at any rate in the first half, when he is swaggering narcissistically round the stage, all bright eyed ambition and gleeful self-assurance. One feels he is winning the world for the sheer fun of it, and, once its possessor, might give it away as casually as he took it. There is something dangerously attractive about this embryo tyrant, an impression Hall's detached, unjudging and often humorous direction makes no effort to correct.

But of course any such effort would be redundant, because the character quite adequately condemns himself in the second half, slaughtering women and children, and blithely slitting the throat of a son whose enthusiasm for the fray he thinks too tepid. Late Tamburlaine is only a more grizzled, tough and ruthless version of early Tambur-

When Cassius Steals the Show

By MEL GUSSOW

NEW HAVEN Julius Caesar" can be considered as a play about the death of Caesar or the conspiracy of Brutus. It can be viewed as a play about Marc Antony; because of Marion Brando, the Joseph Mankiewicz movie version shifted the play somewhat in that direction.

Even when played by John Gielgud, Cassius has operated around the periphery of the drama. It is more Brutus's conscience and Antony's powers of crowd persuasion that concern us. But the idea of turning "Julius Caesar" into "Caius Cassius" is not so farfetched.

There are hints of such an interpretation in Yale's program notes (as usual the notes are voluminous), which parallel the assassination of Caesar with that of the Kennedys, Lincoln and Martin Luther King. Viewed as an Oswald or a Sirhan, as an outsider, an obsessed and disabused exile, Cassius increases in dramatic interest. But at Yale this is not so much a matter of conception as of casting. This becomes a play about Cassius because Ron Leibman is playing Cassius.

Leibman usually is seen in comic roles—and he can be convulsively funny. His Cassius is serious, but the actor is still manic. He is not only lean and hungry, he is voracious for power almost to the point of being cannibalistic. He rubs his fevered brow, slaps his sides and thumps his chest. He crashes through some speeches as if he were in a speed-acting competition (blurring dialogue, perhaps the lines he doesn't like). He turns his death scene into a howling, stomach-wrenching impalement that makes Caesar's murder seem almost discreet by comparison.

There is a perverse fascination about watching Leibman and there are moments—for example as he sneeringly contemplates a snub from Caesar—when we think that with greater discipline and direction he might be quite successful in his approach to Shakespeare. But on this occasion he overwhelms the play and the other members of the cast, two of whom are giving fine performances: Tom Hill as a highly principled Brutus and Robert Drivas as an Antony with a rising sense of authority (his funeral oration swells from a mild suggestion to a storm of anger).

With or without Leibman, this production would not be on a plane with Epstein's other estimable Yale productions of Shakespeare (particularly his "A Midsummer Night's Dream"). Some of the minor roles are carelessly enacted. Battle scenes are unconvincing. Tony Straiges's scenery—except for the sidelong fiery-red brick wall that signifies this bloodbath of a play—look as if it were borrowed from a gymnasium. Jeanne Button's costumes—tunics as short as tutus—are graceless.

Most disconcerting is Kirk Nurock's "vocal and instrumental music," sounds scored for voices—orchestrated exhalations and susurrations. This "Cassius" is filled with Nurock's sound and Leibman's fury.

"There is one thing these three companies are beginning to have in common: the tendency to invite modern-dance or Broadway choreographers into their inner sanctum."

Joffrey—a director's company

One of the more lucid definitions came from John Martin in the 1930's, when he was dance critic for this newspaper. Modern dance, he said, was not a system; it was a point of view. But classical ballet training is very much a system, and it is that training which defines a ballet company. A ballet company relies upon dancers who have trained—usually since childhood—in the academic or classical ballet technique. A modern-dance company does not require this technique; indeed, its study was even proscribed in modern-dance's pioneer days.

Yet several developments have since taken place. There has been a loosening of prejudice between the ballet and modern-dance camps. In addition, many dancers today are trained in both ballet and modern-dance techniques, although they are usually better at one idiom than another. Also, many choreographers fuse elements of both ballet and modern-dance into their movement style.

Working with such hybrid forms, however, is different from turning a ballet company into a modern-dance company. The risk of dilution of first principles, for both ballet and for modern-dance, is not inevitable but it is present. It will be interesting to see, for instance, whether the Feld troupe performs the company premiere of Kathryn Posin's "Waves" this coming Friday with the same muscular tension that her own modern-dance company gives it.

The reverse side of the coin holds true for the Pennsylvania Ballet. Can it consistently sustain the high standards of classical style it has shown in its Balanchine ballets if its dancers increasingly find themselves in jazz-tinted and modern-dance works? This week's Pennsylvania premieres, for example, promise to take a nonclassical direc-

Three Brands of Ballet on Stage

The dance season, if not on little cat feet, has crept up on us. Suddenly, there are three leading ballet companies performing in town this week. The Eliot Feld Ballet holds a gala benefit tomorrow at the Newman Theater in Joseph Papp's Public Theater and opens its five-week season officially on Wednesday. The Pennsylvania Ballet will be at the Brooklyn Academy of Music from Tuesday through Sunday. Meanwhile, the Joffrey Ballet, which opened last Wednesday, will perform at the City Center through Nov. 7. With the New York City Ballet and American Ballet Theater, which open later in the season, these companies constitute the major league in American ballet.

And what is striking about American ballet is that none of these troupes resembles the others. As if to accent this point, even those companies that have overlapping repertoires are those which differ most in spirit, in founding principle and in performing style.

The Joffrey, for instance, is a director's company, with 20th-century classics and new works that reflect the taste of Robert Joffrey. The Feld company is, at heart, a choreog-rapher's company, a creative outlet for Mr. Feld himself. The Pennsylvania Ballet is the country's best regional company, grounded in a strong classical base but, at the moment, searching for a creative spark.

There is, nonetheless, one thing these companies on view this week are beginning to have in common. This is the tendency that they—as classically trained ensembles—now have to invite modern-dance or Broadway choreographers into their sanctum.

Modern-dance choreographers working inside a ballet company are not a totally new development. What is new is the frequency with which modern-dance works are now seen in ballet companies. This hospitality toward a different dance idiom is also an open admission of what everyone knows—namely, that good choreographers in the classical ballet idiom are scarce. In the past, this fact of ballet life was not readily acknowledged. For decades, company managers preferred to stage ballets by any choreographer classically trained choreographer over works by modern-dance choreographers whose work was defined as "modern dance."

Feld—a choreographer's company

tion. Tuesday's program includes Margo Sappington's tribute to Alexander Calder, "Under the Sun"; Hill Sagan's "Sweet Agony," to music by rock-jazz pianist and composer John Adams. On Wednesday will be local premieres of Rodney Griffitts' "Edin" and Benjamin Harkavy's "For Fred, Gene and Mimi." I am unfamiliar with Mr. Sagan's work, and Mr. Harkavy is a classical choreographer, his name title suggests it is closer to the pop styles of Misty in Paris and Mr. Griffin, who are closely identified with way musicals.

Meanwhile, the Joffrey Ballet, which has of ballets that have veered away from pure class ("Petrochka," "Parade," "The Big City") is also works by choreographers clearly identified in independent dance careers as modern-dance (not ballet) raphers. These include José Limón, represented in "Moor's Pavane" this season; Anna Sokolow, who "65" will be revived on Oct. 26; Twyla Tharp, who is represented by her new untitled work on Oct. 26 as "Dance Coupe II" and "As Time Goes By."

This is not the place to discuss why there are great choreographers in classical ballet (Why is Tolstoy today...?) It is a fact that there are modern-dance choreographers, a proliferation of the nature of modern dance itself (a point of view is not idiosyncratic in the same sense as mood which allows for a wider variety of "personal" expression).

It is easy to see why ballet companies, a dearth of classical choreographers, are turning to modern-dance choreographers. The question in the future whether any kind of modern-dance choreography improvement over any kind of ballet choreography

In 1953 "The Front" could not have been made. Here's what you would have missed.

"A moving, haunted film about the panic that swept this country during the late 1940's and early 50's. The film's inspiration is the casting of Woody Allen... he is simply carrying the familiar Allen character into another context of experience, which endows the character with unexpected and real humanity."

"One of the year's best films."

"The inimitable Gianniini in the funniest, bawdiest sex comedy of the year."

"Gianniini proves again what a delicious comedian he is. He has more charm than a barrelful of kittens. Laura Antonelli has an incomparable loveliness, both ribald and innocent enough to turn saints into fiends and vice versa."

"Gianniini is an immensely gifted character actor... Antonelli is a stunning beauty and a talented comedienne."

political story, that I tried to bring it back to life? Perhaps it was the fact that from my window I could see the flag waving over the Presidential Citadel, bearing the inscription "The Truth Is Victorious."

Is "Poor Murderer" a political play? According to Herbert Berghof, who is staging it for Broadway, the work is "devoid of propaganda," which of course does not preclude its having political significance.

"I protest in advance against the suspicion that this is a political work. I also protest against the suspicion that it is not a political work. Maybe it is simply a play I wrote in Prague."

"We've even appealed to the U.N.," Berghof was saying, referring to efforts being made to persuade Prague to restore Kohout's passport.

"I have noticed that actually the truth is rarely victorious and that her rare victories do not last too long."

"I think he's a true Czech socialist who wouldn't want to leave his country for good," Berghof continued.

"You know, when Kohout still had his own theater in Prague, he declared himself in these words: 'I want to make theater so that I am understood by the baker and the butcher.'"

"Wherein does the social message of my play lie...? Some think there is none, because there is nothing in it of Vietnam or the right of co-determination, because neither anti-authoritarian nor totalitarian problems are dealt with."

"You always think, when you're working on something you like, that 'this is it,'" Berghof said.

Berghof said he first heard of Kohout in 1967, when he came across a Kohout play titled "August, August, August."

Kohout—"I defend theater with politics"

ed by many as a prescient about the brief flowering in Prague before the Russian rolled in.

"Where does evil come from gives its strength? ... Should evil with evil or should one ing evil, stay true to the principle, even if it can be evil—and is?"

Berghof was reluctant to concept of the play. "I do explain anything about my said. 'Do like to hear what the audience. I'd much understood through my work talk. I know that's not ver he said, smiling at Bloomg thank goodness John is: ve with me."

Bloomgarden was sympat difficult to define "Poor Mur out getting into a discussion reveal the mystery within."

"The title, for example, ca two ways," said Berghof. "It can either suggest comp the murderer, in the sense of murderer"—or indicate that j didn't murder well; that he w a poor murderer. Well, it so complex than it is. I felt that "Waiting for Godot" too, wh ed its Broadway premiere, all can be a much more popular "Godot."

"You ask: What is more for me, politics or theater? Politics. Because I defend the with politics."—Pavel Kohout.

"THE PRINCE OF HOMBURG"—Patricia Easton and Frank Langella star in the play by Heinrich von Kleist, being given its American premiere Tuesday at Brooklyn's Chelsea Theater Center.

Comments on 'The Blacklist'

To the Editor:
I wish Hilton Kramer's article ("The Blacklist and the Cold War," Oct. 3) could be made required reading for everyone born after 1940.
ARTHUR SCHLESINGER, Jr.
New York City

To the Editor:
As Dalton Trumbo's biographer I feel called upon to answer the attack on him contained in Hilton Kramer's article.
To quote Mr. Kramer: "When Dalton Trumbo died last month, The New York Times matter-of-factly reported that he admitted in 1970, when he was securely restored to Hollywood clover, to having been a member of the Communist Party from 1943 to 1948, and again briefly in 1954—a fact conveniently omitted from the visible interview with Trumbo that is part of 'Hollywood on Trial.'" Trumbo "admitted" nothing in 1970. He simply published a letter that year in "Additional Dialogue" which he had written to Frances G. Knight, director of the Passport Office, on July 10, 1958 (while the blacklist was still in force), in which he stated that he had received a passport that had long been denied him. Here is what he said:
"The curious thing about this whole ugly business of compulsory revelation lies in the fact that most people prefer to be open and forthright about their beliefs and affiliations. To believe in something that can't be expressed is an absurdity, and they know it. There was, for example, a period in my life (and in my wife's, though from matrimonial rather than political considerations) when I was a member of the Communist party. I made no secret of it at all. Whenever political discussions arose whether among friends, adversaries or mere chance acquaintances, I never failed to state that I spoke as a Communist; and before I was approached to write a motion picture I invariably informed the producer of my political affiliations in advance of acceptance. Yet when a Committee of the Congress, in clear violation of the First Amendment, sought to compel a revelation I had always cheerily volunteered, I refused the answer and paid the legal penalty which refusal entailed."
BRUCE COOK
Kensington, Md.

To the Editor:
I was very glad to see Hilton Kramer's piece on the revision of some not-so-ancient history. Although I do not generally agree with what I infer to be his "position," since I am loath of positions and cannot escape the nagging presence of social equanimity and the cruelest injustice, I of course know that totalitarianism is worse than "injustice" and so I always despise those who defend it. My own review of "Scoundrel Time" was refused by The New Republic. But it has to be said that Heilman's influence on friends who disagree with her—like the editor of

The New Republic—and tendentious introduction by Gary Willis—is a notable one. I was grateful for the Kramer's article and for the editor's response.

To the Editor:
Hilton Kramer's article is a bit—summing up a very shaded issue without facets and bringing out the Trumbo, Heilman, et al.—have slipped down the day. It was especially on the day we got that Streisand as the happy ending.

To the Editor:
The major error in this essay is revealed, I believe, in the title to "people who Government the right to what it judged to be 'curry'." Behind this various aside remarks Heilman's alleged support of atrocities is the suggestion can Communists, whether industry or otherwise, in league with Stalin, a jerk the American people.

But what was this threat not Mr. Kramer's about that Communists had a lock city positions, jobs in the steady, the real issue is that of American Communist columnists for Stalin and hordes.

Where was the proof? was in the mythology of Truman loyalty program, hearings, the various as and ultimately in the execution of my parent Julius Rosenberg.

This mythology, "proof of my parents, was that were indeed spies and so ceeded in stealing the atom bomb and breaching security. From this point think it is fitting that takes place in 1953, the : ents were killed, the Am could believe (as unfair many still do) that the security was so great that ment was forever justifie and conducting policy in pealing the Bill of Rights ing people it defined as s: short—in replicating Stal tect us from Stalin!

But American Commu: their naive about Russia and 1940's, were not spies were framed. The threat i nists and all left-winger: not to the nation's securi

"If sin, like truth and beauty, is in the eye of the beholder, 'Story of Sin' is a delight to the eye. Eroticism, costuming, settings and photography are artistically detailed. Lovers engulfed in newly found ecstasy leave little to the imagination, and lust and murder are made equally specific in rich, red damask rooms. Mr. Borowczyk is just as careful in maintaining a fast, narrative pace. Eva is curvaceous, genuinely winning and realistic, both as the virgin introduced to love and sex amid swirling white petticoats or nude or in black corsets as the seemingly callous streetwalker."

educational or cable television stations, to film festivals or to the 1,800 school districts in the country for purposes of promotion.

Joan Micklin Silver, director of "Hester Street," and Karen Arthur, director of "Legacy," experienced years of frustration before securing distribution for their films. "Joan and I got lucky," said Miss Arthur. "But for every one of us I know, there are hundreds out there who aren't able to complete their films. It's such a struggle to raise money."

The sources of funding are shrinking as a result of inflation, prohibitive production costs and the complex problems of distribution and exhibition. Many of the foundations—such as Ford, Rockefeller and Carnegie—that were supporting independent filmmakers have sharply curtailed their involvement and so the competition for the few grants from the American Film Institute and the State Councils on the Arts is fierce.

Recently, the Ford Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts did allocate a matching $500,000 grant to be given to a non-profit, tax-exempt organization in 1977 for independently produced, public-broadcasting documentaries. "That will help," said David M. Davis, program officer in charge of the Office of Communications of the Ford Foundation. "Independent filmmakers will have a door to knock on, although it won't solve the problem, because there will never be enough money for them."

In the past, public-broadcasting television served as a breeding ground for independent filmmakers, but those days seem to be over. "The television networks have control over communication, and they no longer take independent films," said Ed Lynch, a filmmaker and cameraman who worked on "Woodstock" and "Marjoe." He is also the president of the Association of Independent Video and Filmmakers, Inc., an organization of 400 New York moviemakers. "I see it as an abridgment of the First Amendment, free speech. In order for a culture to be alive and well, it needs the viewpoint of other voices and perspectives." According to Mr. Lynch, the networks should be required by the Fairness Doctrine to air topical documentaries. "Even Channel 13 doesn't want independent films any more," he said. "They think that all people want to watch are things like the Adams Chronicles. The independent documentary for television is dead."

Richard Leacock, a cameraman and filmmaker who is considered one of the founding fathers of cinema verité, is now the head of the Film Section at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "All you can do is a certain amount of commercial work and you try to make that pay for your personal work," he said recently. "But there's no distribution. Television, even PBS, wants malleable idiots."

During the sixties, Mr. Leacock made films for TV's "Omnibus." "They actually used independent filmmakers," he recalled. "I got my first shot at it there, and I had complete freedom. But it fizzled out. It only attracted six million viewers, which was not enough."

What advice does Mr. Leacock have for his students—and the 35,000 like them across the country? "Go to law school!"

The Exhilarating Freshness of Stevie Wonder

By JOHN ROCKWELL

Stevie Wonder's new album, "Songs in the Key of Life," has been the most eagerly awaited piece of pop music this year. Already it has been with fulsome enthusiasm...

an album that is both worthy of the most serious consideration and exhilarating to listen to, and as such it lays claim to our attention in the way that the greatest pop records of the 1960's used to do.

had to survive a protracted contractual confusion between Mr. Wonder and his record company, Motown, and more seriously it had to survive Mr. Wonder's own nervous self-consciousness.

not the first. "Little Stevie Wonder" first burst onto the national scene in 1963. Blind from birth, his real name was Stevland (or Stevland) Judkins (or Morris)—the facts are hopelessly confused.

audiences happy with his sheer energy. Then came a teenaged slough, punctuated by periodic hits but mostly a time for the cranking out of songs in the Motown formula of the mid-60's.

Motown contract, winning a creative independence unprecedented with that company. The result was a series of critically and commercially successful disks. He was almost killed in an automobile accident in 1973, but recovered to put out "Fulfillingness' First Finale" in 1974. Then, silence.

were, then just as tentatively press the drawers of the close. Inspecting her achievement solemnly, and returns to her chores. She looks up again. He's done wrong? Just as thoughtfully, she returns...

of Frya, unfortunately, works on something of a principle. If the just-right line is uncertain of advice is best run—should it be tucked or simply own devices—the playwright is equally uncertain...

comedy's on top and it is no doubt meant to carry the burden. But it's a bit half-hearted, and too far from the same stool, for that. The library is a group of semi-zany who presumably wade-check quotations and dig out ancient facts but mostly keeping themselves from their typewriters...

STAGE VIEW

But What's It All About?

group," getting down on his knees and pawing about like a dog to prove, in his playful way, just how intellectually and emotionally repulsed they all are.

The seriousness comes in splinters between shenanigans, and, for all that it's gone before you can quite grab hold of it, I liked it best. While the others are making their glancing jokes, Miss French is idly leafing a big-city newspaper. They still haven't found that little girl, she murmurs suddenly, out of nowhere. There is a chill, very faint, very brief. Then someone else has chirped "No reading!" as though concern for others was irrelevant in this inconsequential world, and the arch tomfoolery quickly begins again.

The symbolism? I suppose we have to look to the plot-line for that, though the plot-line, too, seems to exist independently of the play's other gestures. The young assistant,

Jeanne Ruskin, turns out to be a compulsive tidier after all. Eventually she does close the cabinet, firmly, rearranging the room, desk, even the love-lives of the personnel. (It's a mess designer's touch that the venetian blinds have been straightened as well.) Like Muscogold, our Little Miss Fife has got the tapers running on time, though none of the others seems very happy about it; we wonder for a time if this is to be yet another attack on the "efficiency" of British socialism.

Then the implications veer sharply, creating more of a puzzle than a conclusion. Just as efficiency has reached its peak, the paper collapses. The plot-line does, too, for it's immediately made plain that the busy girl's improvements have had nothing to do with the debacle. "Some things happen independently of you," Miss French remarks morosely, reaching for an apple as solace. Watching the play, I suppose we ought to have been warned—by the dust on that globe, or by Mr. Horton's insistence that the paper is under the protection of St. Jude, "the patron of lost causes"—that this was on the way. No matter what you do or don't do, disaster will come of it. Entropy, no doubt.

If, in spite of the Long Wharf's immaculate production, the event as a whole is unsatisfying, it's because the playwright's three tones have never been fused into a single dominant chord. However sportive or thoughtful or just plain gifted a dramatist may be, his play has still got to be about something as it gambols or dawdles its way along, something defined enough to seize whole in our fists; we can't spend most of the evening fishing about for an intention to respond to, a gratification to take home with us. Next time, perhaps.

Jack Gelber's new play, which is called "Jack Gelber's New Play: Rehearsal" and is currently at the American Place, is, I'm sorry to say, a double void. It's a play that doesn't exist about rehearsing another play that doesn't exist, though at first glance it may seem to have something as philosophically fantastic on its mind as Mr. Frya's apparently does. Almost at once, the director, who is feeding himself Geinell while sending out for more stogies (he works at a cluttered table on our side of the footlights), announces to the company that there is "no final script." He and his argumentative actors are simply wading through hundreds of pages of an author's text, rewriting as they go (especially to work in a homosexual rape, once the right way to masturbate has been disposed of), quarreling now and again with the producer over additional rehearsal time and the proper theater to open in ("we need a really grim basement—downtown.") The author's manuscript, dealing with prison life, is meant to be kept fluid; all that is certain about it is that at the end "all of the actors go to center stage and die."

The incompleteness of the actors' world and the fact that the only certainty is death may sound philosophical, but it's not. It's just random ad-libbing, vamping till ready, on Mr. Gelber's part. Yes, he can throw in the kind of things pompous actors do say in rehearsal. ("These discussions serve a function; who are we doing this play for?") and yes, he can toss in bits and pieces from all the prison plays we've already had (though I think the business of having a guard speak of the "penal" system while holding his truncheon in the penis position is a bit childish of him).

But simply crossing the two back and forth doesn't make for intelligent or purposeful clash, or progression, or dramatic meaning of any sort. There's an engaging performance by Fred Karemam as a former colts of the author's, trying to get into the company and hustle hot merchandise at the same time, looking the while—with his scrunched-up eyes and injured upper lip—like a minor-league Bert Lehr. And there's an eerie moment when, in a deserted theater, a lone "Hello" is called out from the rear of the auditorium. But that's it, and I'm sure a "Good-bye" would have been just as effective. Not to mention appropriate.

Stevie Wonder

One's initial reaction was of caution. Double albums often indicate a failure of self-discipline more than an abundance of things to say. And Mr. Wonder, whose music has always had a loose, improvisatory feeling to it (for all his mastery of studio trickery), has been known to wallow in excessive length, naive lyrics and uneven material. How would he hold up against all the expectations? Would all those announcements of release dates, withdrawals and rumors of all-night sessions in the studio result in an album torn by indecision and burdened with fussy overproduction?

The answer is, no. Certainly, each person will favor some songs over others. And Mr. Wonder's very fidelity to his black roots will grate on some white listeners' sensibilities—the whole thing sprawls relaxedly, yet at the same time aspires in a sermon-like manner to be profound. But it still has to be heard, and those who don't prize it as a statement of personal consciousness and black identity can simply listen to the music, which is wonderful enough.

Mr. Wonder goes on for 21 songs because he has been bottled up for 26 months: It's amazing this isn't a three-record album, given what we know of his fecundity. The songs in this album aren't bound rigidly to a single conceptual theme, but taken together they echo ideas Mr. Wonder has dealt with before: love and family above all but also a strong sense of social justice, black history and the place of religion in modern life. The lyrics will never be confused for poetry that can stand alone, and sometimes they are downright banal. But more and more they attain an enigmatic, worthy of consideration.

Mr. Wonder's singing is strong ever here, and his dexterity at boards and the other instruments overdues is superb. He mixes techniques of overdubbing (a single performer can literally a one-man band) with other in a way that stimulates his ears as a collaborative performer lets him experiment on his songs are built as they always been on the cumulative repetition of phrases and melodic lines the textures steadily enriched keys raised in terraced steps tain interest.

Above all, there is his ear for fresh sounds and the "hooks" that stick delightfully in memory. Mr. Wonder's use of sizes has long colored his music, and there is no falling in The stately, stringing sounds lage Ghetto Land" or the t excitements in "Pastime Parad the most classically formal." Wonder's patented twang at his funky, upbeat tunes are evidence, and indeed every so namented with some effect, subtle, that sets it apart from dane world of pop formulas.

But effects mean nothing if it out by themselves, grafted on diary. What makes Mr. Wonder record into a marvel is the sweeps all his tricks into a vis is completely personal. One from this album not only end and moved, but with the set one knows Mr. Wonder bet may indeed be a self-indulgent but that's all right if the self is worth it.

"A singer has to give emotion to the audience, and for that you must be a complete performer, not just a good singer and not just a good actress." (Renata Scott) operatic artists of our time." He said further, "No one else sings like this today. . . . One has to go back to Lotte Lehmann for this kind of intense declamation of text."

Interviewed recently at her East Side apartment, Miss Scott spoke of her approach to operatic interpretation. "A singer has to give emotion to the audience, and for that you must be a complete performer, not just a good singer and not just a good actress. I have always tried to be both."

The roles she now prefers are those that challenge her both musically and dramatically in such operas as "Trovatore," "Prophete," Verdi's "Luisa Miller" and Bellini's "Norma." She describes them as "complete parts that require a lot of exciting singing, style and much dramatic interpretation."

"The verismo tradition is to take no cases of the voice, to rend the heart with shrieks and growling low notes," she said, gesturing broadly. "I intend to change that. Puccini, Mascagni and the other verismo composers wrote the same instructions as Bellini and Verdi—legato, pianissimo, espressione. They never wrote 'force the voice.'"

"I will keep my Verdi roles and Norma, which is my favorite," she continued, "but the most important thing for me now is to take on certain dramatic verismo roles and sing them with bel canto technique, but with drama, as I have always sung 'Butterfly.' My technique is secure enough that I think I can do this without damaging the voice."

Miss Scott received her first brief vocal training in her early teens in Savona, Italy, where she was born. She soon moved to Milan and studied there with the Spanish singer Mercedes Llopert. For most of her professional life her only teacher and coach has been her husband Lorenzo Anselmi, a violinist who has given up his career to devote himself to her.

"I was lucky to find a husband who is a musician," she said. "He controls my voice. I study technique with him, vocalizing two or three hours a day, training like an athlete. That way I worry about my voice at home. In the theater I devote myself entirely to interpretation."

She never had acting lessons but developed her dramatic skills in opera houses, working with producers and observing other performers. Smiling, Renata Scott: "As long as I do this kind of work, I can be happy—but always with my fingers crossed."

Notes: The Naughty Maggot And the Lecherous Ass

By SHIRLEY FLEMING

Peter Maxwell Davies is a dauntlessly inventive British composer who was most recently represented in this city when Pierre Boulez and the New York Philharmonic played the American premiere of his "Stone Labyrinth" last March. Ten years ago Davies founded a chamber music group with the characteristically flamboyant title of The Fires of London, and on Oct. 27 and Nov. 3 this ensemble, now on its first North American tour, will appear at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

The aim of The Fires of London is to expand the repertoire of contemporary chamber music. The group is not averse, either, to dipping into England's own golden age of composition and coming up with a Purcell piece or two. The same program includes a Davies theater work called "Miss Donnithorne's Maggot" which is, in the words of a British listener who heard it recently, "very funny, very sad, and rather naughty."

Miss Donnithorne, it turns out, was the unfortunate resident of Sydney, Australia, who became a real-life version of Miss Havisham in Dickens's "Great Expectations." Having been jilted on her wedding day, she remained in her wedding dress for 30 years, and the wedding breakfast remained on the table for the same length of time. Davies mentions with a certain understated relish that a Maggot is a 17th-century dance form as well as a creature who doubtless found happiness in the Donnithorne dining room. He wrote the work for the Adelaide Festival in 1974, and though there are musical references to 17th-century style in the score, "They are," he says, "parenthetical. It is a very contemporary piece."

Davies, who has made numerous trips to the United States, will be appearing here for the first time as a conductor with The Fires of London.

Fauvel Spells Trouble

Falsehood, Avarice, Uncle, Vicious, Envy, and Lechery—put them all together and they spell Fauvel, who is the central personage in a collection of medieval verses which in the past two seasons has caught the attention of two New York-based performing groups. Fauvel himself is an ass, at least in the physical sense, being a half-human figure bedecked by a donkey's head; he was a troublemaker in 14th-century literature and he is a troublemaker still.

A staged production of "Le Roman de Fauvel" by the Waverly Consort at the 22d Street Y-M-W-E-A on Wednesday is being billed as the world premiere performance. This is somewhat perturbing to the Ensemble for Early Music, which staged its own premiere of "Le Roman de Fauvel" just a year ago at Hunter College. There is no intention to mislead, according to Michael Jaffe, the Waverly's music director, who explains that over 6,000 Fauvel verses exist (the originals are in the Paris Bibliothèque Nationale) and that the Waverly's choice of verses and music for its own "premiere" will scarcely overlap the choices made by the Ensemble for Early Music.

The "Roman" itself began to emerge from musical obscurity in the early 1950's when a transcription into modern notation was made of the polyphonic portions of the manuscript; a later doctoral dissertation transcribed the monophonic segments. The music, according to Jaffe, was added to the medieval verses by various hands a few years after the verses themselves were created, and much of it is found scattered throughout a variety of other medieval manuscripts. But it goes beautifully with the Fauvel text, says Jaffe. "It has some light moments, but much of it is found up with heavy metaphysical meaning and is deeply emotional."

A New "Disappointment"

A second case of "double premieres" involves an 18th-century American ballet opera called "The Disappointment," which was produced by the Bistate Bicentennial Committee last August at Washington Crossing Park in New Jersey. It, too, is coming up for a fresh hearing at the Library of Congress on Oct. 29 and 30, in a new version by the Eastman School of Music under the direction of Gerald Graue, chairman of the musicology department.

"The Disappointment" has been a long time coming. The libretto was published in 1767 but the performances were banned in Philadelphia for the piquant reason that the characters were all based on Philadelphians who happened to be alive at the time, and the portraits were none too flattering. Graue describes it as an "extremely attractive play," based on the old tradition of the scape hunt—the search for buried treasure which turns out to be a hoax. (The behavior of those Philadelphians in pursuit of gold was the source of the censorship problem.)

When the libretto was published it included the names of the standard popular tunes to which the songs were fitted. Graue's job, with the help of Professor Judith Lang of Hiram College in Ohio, was to hunt out the English tune books—much circulated in the Colonies at the time—and match the tunes to the proper melody. Two of these, at least, need no introduction: "Yankee Doodle" and "Over the Hills and Far Away." Samuel Adler of Eastman has written the arrangements.

"The Disappointment" may be the first opera written by an American for an American audience. The author is known only by the pseudonym of Andrew Barton.

Minority Report on 'Porgy'

disturbed by this libretto, and many still are. That by now "Porgy and Bess" can be regarded as a piece of still, there is something distasteful about the notion of librettist and composer—two white men in Charleston.

George Gershwin attempted a "folk opera." The used is all invented, in that he avoided actual folk tunes and the like, and composed "in the style" of the folk music. There is nothing wrong with that. Haydn was no less. The difference is that Gershwin was a composer of the short form, the song. He simply did not have the musical construction to come to the opera, even though, as he has told us, he prepared further study in counterpoint and modern harmony, of course, nothing at all "modern" in "Porgy" which was completed in 1935. It is an opera half-Jazz fine tunes, but these are nowhere supported almost three hours of mindless recitatives, which Gershwin tried to "hedge as Negro inflection in speech as possible," are not even pretentious. It may be one of the ironies of stage history that the original Theatre Guild which dropped those recitatives and substituted dialogue, and which today is universally condemned, gave a real service to the opera. For Broadway opera house is where "Porgy and Bess" belongs.

Act I of "Porgy and Bess" where most of the drama concentrated. Gershwin's inspiration ran out Act III, aside from "There's a Boat Dat's Leavin' New York," goes on and on in a dogged way, life only with reprises of "Summertime" and "Bess, Bess, Now." The arias and operatic aspects of act are white man's music, not the real thing. Gershwin could not avoid his roots. "Porgy and Bess" is a commercial, slick and sentimental. At least only in Blue" and "An American in Paris," junk whose scores may be, have a certain brashness.

One aspect of the current production bothered me, nobody else in the theater. Admittedly, the subject, and that is the sound systems. Musicians, "Porgy and Bess" may be an opera, but in actuality it is commercial Broadway stuff, as the current revival only too mercilessly demonstrates.

tion and, presumably, body music. What results is a peculiar kind of sound—so peculiar that one hesitates passing judgment on any of the voices involved. No matter what a singer's location on stage, the volume remains very much the same. In addition the voices emerge with a hollow kind of sound, as though echo chamber effects have been added. Occasionally singers pass from one microphone to another, and then there is a perceptible change in timbre and volume. As if all this were not disconcerting enough, voices come not from singers' throats but from a vague point in space. In the original production, Todd Duncan, Anne Brown and the others sang, really sang. Here the voices are homogenized, and that was not fair to the artists, for some of the most promising black singers in the country have been engaged for this revival, in addition to such grand veterans as Carol Brice.

"Porgy and Bess" is period in more ways than one. When it had its New York premiere on Oct. 10, 1935, at the Alvin Theatre, it came in for about $50,000. The Houston production probably cost almost ten times as much. It is not generally known that Gershwin was a late starter on the opera, in that others had been jockeying for the rights. True, Gershwin had expressed interest in setting the DuBose Heyward play as early as 1928. But he vacillated. In the meantime Kern and Hammerstein, who had collaborated on the phenomenally successful "Showboat," approached Heyward. Anyway, Gershwin did get the rights.

There even was some interest expressed by the Metropolitan Opera, which was talking about staging the world premiere. Gershwin said no. He wanted "Porgy and Bess" to be exposed to a wider audience. When it was finally done in New York, the drama critics on the whole loved it and the music critics on the whole had many reservations. It took some years—about 30—for "Porgy and Bess" to be accepted as an American classic. European audiences especially found the score quintessentially "American." God help us.

Two years ago there was talk that the Metropolitan Opera was going to stage "Porgy and Bess" as part of the Bicentennial, with Leontyne Price as Bess. In her immediate post-Juilliard days Price had made a huge success in that role. Fortunately some wise head countermanded the idea (although now again there is talk from James Levine about a revival). "Porgy and Bess" on the Metropolitan Opera stage would have been a travesty. By definition, thanks to the song recitatives, "Porgy and Bess" is an opera. But in actuality it is commercial Broadway stuff, as the current revival only too mercilessly demonstrates.

NATHAN MILSTEIN—The violinist will play Brahms's Concerto with the New York Philharmonic at the reopening of Fisher Hall Tuesday night.

Renata Scotto

she confessed that in the early years of her career she tended to overact. "When I made my debut in 1954 in Elisabetta—Violetta in La Traviata—I did a lot more than was necessary. What I liked best was to perform. Recitare to act. I felt it very deeply inside, but did too much. In the beginning, some directors had to say to me, 'Don't do it, and don't do that. It's too much, roppo.' In time I learned to moderate my gestures."

These days Miss Scotto sings almost exclusively for English-speaking audiences. Because her American career has blossomed so profusely during the past two or three years, she moved here last month with her husband and their children, Laura, now seven, and Filippo, aged four.

A pretty woman in her early 40's, Miss Scotto is shorter than she looks on stage. Her rather broad, unlined face reflects only positive emotions as she likes of living and working here. "I love New York. It's a warm, friendly city. I have bought this apartment, and want very much to stay here. My children are in school here. They will not be English, because I have no time for lessons."

The expansion of her American career was the result of a conscious plan by her husband and I made this decision because I have always loved singing in this country and I have found wonderful audiences here, not just in New York but in Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, Boston and especially in San Francisco. The economic situation in Italy is not good at present, and the political situation is confused, and affects the artistic life of the country. Although we still have a house here, I have accepted only two engagements in Italy in the next few years. Coming here was important not just to my career. We think it will be good for the children to live here at least two or four years.

She is happy at the Met, where she is the level of professionalism among the singers very high. And she also warmly of such colleagues as Rita Horns and Placido Domingo and her fellow artists in the current overture, Luciano Pavarotti, Shirley Verrett, Matteo Manuguerra, and Gianluca Gavazzoni, the conductor who is his Met debut opening night.

I first sang with Gavazzoni in 1953, small part in Mussorgsky's Khovanshchina in Rome. Since then he has been my maestro. (In Italian word means "teacher, master, instructor.") He also speaks highly of the Met's director James Levine, with whom she recently recorded Giordano's Macbeth. "I felt that I understood him perfectly and he understood perfectly." To hear her talk of the Met and its personnel with such loyalty and sincerity, one might think this opera house has always been her happy home. It hasn't.

Miss Scotto made her Met debut in 1955, the last season in the old house, she was well received in Madama Butterfly. "Lidia di Lammermoor" and L'Esprit d'Amore. At that time, however, the Italian repertoire was dominated by Jean Sutherland, Leonard Price, and Renata Tebaldi. Other names who made debuts that season were Revl Grist, Pilar Lorengar, Mirella Freni, and Montserrat Caballé, all of whom had some of her roles in their repertoires. She returned regularly over the next several years, but in 1972 she announced that she was tired of appearing in old productions without much rehearsal and would not sing at the Met again until she was offered a new production or opening night.

She was absent for only one season, 1973-74. Promising her opening night in 1975, the management invited her back to the Met for a few performances of Verdi's "I Vespri Siciliani" in the fall of 1974, and she accepted. Elena in that opera is one of her "complete parts," and she sang it with great success.

Other recent accomplishments include her concert performance of "Butterfly" in Central Park in June of 1975, which, according to a Met official, drew the largest audience in the history of the company's park series, an estimated 100,000 people. And early this year she became the first soprano ever to sing all three leading roles in Puccini's "Trittico" at the Met in one evening, the kind of tour de force that generates great excitement among opera fans.

Now, she has had her opening night and has not one, but two new productions to look forward to. Why were they so important? "Opening night at the Met is like opening night at La Scala, the most important evening you can have. There is a kind of excitement that I like very much. It is not fear or nervousness, but excitement that brings forth the best from all the performers. My debut in 'Trittico' was like that."

She added that the casts for such special occasions are generally the best available singers. "We have a word in Italian, agonismo, which is not jealousy, but competition, like in sports. Your colleague sings a very beautiful phrase, and you think, 'Oh, you can do that? Now it is my turn, and I can do this.' It's stimulating for the singers and for the audience."

New productions are attractive to her because they have that same atmosphere of a special occasion and a more generous allotment of rehearsal time. "It is not easy to develop an interpretation for the opera house. It requires many long quiet rehearsals. But I want to know exactly what I am going to do on stage. I want to be secure."

In the new production of "Bohème", after she has sung Mimì in the initial run, she will switch to the secondary role of Musetta for two performances just to amuse herself. She hopes to show that Musetta is not just a superficial coquette, but a nice woman with many human qualities.

Her current engagements outside the Met include opening the Cincinnati season with "Norma". And with the Sacred Music Society of America she will sing a concert performance in New York of Respais's "Cecilia", a religious work of the verismo period. Negotiations are also in progress for future Met seasons. The operas she is most eager to sing there include "Norma", "Luis Miller", Puccini's "Manon Lescaut" and "Andrea Lecouvreur". With the last of these she is scheduled to open the season in San Francisco next year.

Over the next few months her big 1976-77 season will be enhanced by the release of the records she made during the summer, working for both RCA and Columbia. They include an album of songs by verismo composers and three complete operas, "Prophète", "Andrea Chenier" and Puccini's "Suor Angelica".

Established in a new home, surrounded by her family, and with a busy and satisfying professional life, Miss Scotto gives the impression of stability and happiness. But it's not a good idea to tempt the gods by looking too happy. "Like many Italians and many theater people, I am superstitious," she said.

"We singers live on the razor's edge. Yes, I am secure, tranquilla, happy, tutto è bello, but I still have to go out on stage and sing. The voice is not like a violin or a piano. It is a human instrument and can only be controlled so far. I could catch a cold. As long as I do this kind of work, I can be happy, but always with my fingers crossed." And she held them up to show that she had her fingers crossed on both hands.

PHOTOGRAPHY VIEW

GENE THORNTON

Surprising Nudes And Still Lives

Although neither Paul Strand nor Berenice Abbott is known for his or her photographs of nudes, both photographers took them, and examples of their work in this genre are among the surprises in the two exhibitions now at the Helios gallery, "The Nude in Photography" and "The Still Life in Photography."

Strand's nude, taken in Taos, New Mexico, in 1930, is a female torso cut off just above the hips and pendulous breasts and just below the full, heavy lips. She is a formidable presence as she looms over the photographer (and the viewer). The Abbott nude, taken around 1948 to oblige a rich female admirer of the model, is a stark female seen from behind in a pose as monumental and almost as simplified as a Henry Moore sculpture.

Quite as interesting and almost as surprising as these two nudes are the elaborate Victorian still lifes by the English photographer, Roger Fenton—luscious, formal arrangements of fruit, flowers, bric-a-brac and lace that in no way resemble the bare and unadorned Chinese War photographs that are Fenton's best known work. There is also a semi-Cubist still life by Strand, "Jag and Fruit," a dead white table top seen from above on which a banana, two oranges and a small jug are as black and shiny as if they were of tar. This picture must be one of the series Strand made in 1915 in an attempt to produce a photographic equivalent of Cubist painting, but the forced contrasts between dark and light are not characteristic of his work.

The rich and varied exhibition at Helios is not a scholar's show, but it does illustrate the development of photographic style from Victorian times to our own. The plain style of Fox Talbot's still lifes, circa 1842, is well-suited to pictures that were, essentially, demonstrations of the camera's ability to distinguish between the varied textures of gilt, leather, glass and table linen. However, by the early 1860's, when Fenton composed his elaborate still lifes, photographers were consciously aiming for high art effects.

After Fenton's Victorian opulence, a process of simplification begins with the turn-of-the-century pictorialism of Heinrich Kuehn and Baron de Meyer. Kuehn's rich, classical arrangements are still touched with Victorian extravagance, but de Meyer was a devotee of the plainer, more modern style. In his "Hydrangea" of 1918 perfect blossom in a simple glass jar is placed at the top and an otherwise nearly empty space, the whole awash with light and pale shadows. After it come the further simplified Strand, sharp-focus, realist stripped-down "modern" nudes as the bowl full of eggs photographed by Paul Outerbridge in 1922. LEO Raymond in 1976.

The photographer of the nude not have the same control of arrangement and lighting of his as the still life photographer, (or she) is also more likely to be by extra-artistic motives. In Muybridge's instantaneous graphs of people and animals were made not from artistic but to establish scientifically and animals actually not clear whether scientific or graphic motives predominate anonymous 1847 calotype of prostitute, but an erotic element in Baron Wilhelm von turn-of-the-century studies of boys in semi-classical poses as tiny anonymous snapshots of toipe Morrell and friends posed on the grounds of Garwin country house. It is hard to lo to make of George Platt Lyn photograph of a fully dressed smiling George Balanchine or two of his dancers, Nicholas lanes and Marie Jeanne, both smiling.

Despite such curiosities, how stylistic development of nude photography clearly parallels that of life, from the Victorian op Braque's "Odalisque," cit through the swooning, soft-focus of Stiechen's "La Ciga to the sharp-focus modernism and Edward Weston. There a

PETER HAYWARD

"A VERY SPECIAL FEELING"
THROUGH OCTOBER 22nd, 1976

Artist Peter Hayward brings to the Grand Central Art Galleries in this, his 12th exhibition, a very special feeling. Now more than ever, his perceptions of city scenes on canvas serve as a meaningful reminder that the vitality, motion and culture of our major urban centers must always be preserved.

In this show of 28 oils on canvas, Peter Hayward projects, through his masterful impressionist technique, the charm of the west; the beauty of scenes from the south; the breathtaking shadows of a tree-lined street in Manhattan.

Peter Hayward has declared his love for the cities of this great land at The Grand political security of government officials pushing a certain line.

MICHAEL MEEROPOL
Western New England College
Springfield, Mass.

To the Editor:

Bravo and bravo—for excellence and bravery—to Mr. Kramer for calling a dagger, for that is exactly what revisionist history, and its expression in the arts, amounts to: its target is America's jugular vein.

Masking itself as either documentary or entertainment film, the spate of Left-wing editorial cinema over the past decade has made a travesty of such genres as comedy, tragedy and romance. All of these have been politicized into radical "messages" aimed at "upright" elements.

ALBERT L. WEEKS
New York City

To the Editor:

It is both bad logic and subtly outrageous for Hilton Kramer to try and equate whatever small-time censorship Communists or their fellow-travelers exercised in the entertainment and literary worlds in the 40's and 50's, with the big-time power that Senator McCarthy exercised over the country at large and on American intellectuals in particular during that period.

I would like to see one actor, or writer, or director, stand up and honestly say that he was denied a living in the 40's or 50's because of his anti-Communist stance.

ANDREW DVOSEK
New York City

To the Editor:

The Times has seldom done a more valuable, or needed, journalistic service than the publication of Hilton Kramer's article.

McCarthyism was indeed repellent, but it bore the same relationship to the Stalinists that the Helmsians of the time were rooting for as a skin rash does to cancer.

RICHARD HANSEN
Mamaroneck, N. Y.

To the Editor:

How comforting it must be for Hilton Kramer to be able to stand above the fray and condemn as equally guilty the perpetrators and victims of blacklisting. However, since not only abstract principles but human lives were at stake, Mr. Kramer's lofty stance of impartiality is little more than a mask for moral indifference.

As a historian, I find ludicrous both Mr. Kramer's ill-informed caricature of "revisionist" historiography and his analysis that recent interest in the blacklist derives from a desire to justify retrospectively the radicalism of the 60's. It seems more likely that these works reflect an awareness of the danger of mindless anti-Communism (of the Vietnam War), and of how Mr. Kramer's cry of "national security" has been used to justify any number of violations of civil liberties (the FBI and CIA investigations).

It is certainly unfortunate if, as Mr. Kramer claims, certain unnamed American "Stalinists" opposed the hiring of their political opponents. But as a member of a family victimized by blacklisting, I find it repugnant to equate this situation with the systematic efforts of large corporations and the Government to deprive individuals of a livelihood because of their political beliefs.

ERIC FONER
Visiting Associate Professor Department of History
Princeton University

To the Editor:

Hilton Kramer should make more of an attempt to get his history straight. The revisionist historians who have been laboring for a decade do not, as Mr. Kramer claims, seek to persuade Americans "that the Cold War was somehow a malevolent conspiracy of the Western democracies to undermine the benign intentions of the Soviet Union." We have, however, sought to point out that in the context of America's position of both economic and military superiority at the war's end, alternative policies that might have lessened tensions were avoided. Washington sought to apply its power via use of an economic lever meant to bend the Soviets to our own way. The U.S. denied a postwar loan to Russia, abruptly cut off Lend-Lease, limited U.S.-Soviet trade, cut off Eastern Europe from both loans and trade, and generally tried to force Soviet concessions on purely American terms. U.S. policy was both haughty and expansionist, and sought to exploit Soviet weakness to gain American advantages. This use of predominant economic power worked only to encourage further Soviet intrusions in eastern Europe, and hence to reduce the actual independence of the Eastern European nations.

One suspects that Mr. Kramer's sensibilities are tried by this serious re-examination of our nation's past history; hence his attempt to dismiss and ridicule it by terming it "cultural chic" and a "phenomenon." Having composed a straw man of revisionists who supposedly are trying to present an "imagery of perfect (Communist) innocence," Mr. Kramer proceeds to develop his own readjustment of the historical record by applying a fallacious picture of American innocence. Positing existence of a scenario that supposedly depicts villains on only one side—the anti-Communist—Mr. Kramer makes a most remarkable judgment on the position taken in the mid-1950's by "unfriendly witnesses" before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. (HUAC) "Wealthy, dedicated Communists," he claims, in the interest of both saving their own necks and defending the Party line, refused to cooperate, "denied their true commitments and beliefs, and thereby created an atmosphere of havoc and hazard for the truly innocent."

Mr. Kramer assumes, evidently, that had the witnesses answered by saying, "Yes, we are Communists," the Committee and the movie industry would have folded up shop, dismissed only those real Communists—not good, decent liberals—and the well known excesses of the witchhunt would never have occurred. The evidence from the 1950's suggests that this was not the case. HUAC had made its wish known to Hollywood: dismiss all Communists and crypto-Communists from employment. The original Hollywood Ten chose to refuse to state whether they were or had been Party members, thereby risking a contempt citation and, indeed, wound up in prison (not exactly the way to save one's neck).

What if they had answered the Committee by having those who were members of the Party admit to membership? Would they then have been able to rally effective public support? Movie historian Robert Sklar reaches a different conclusion than Mr. Kramer in his recent book, "Movie-Made America": "Had they confessed their party affiliations, it is far more likely they would have been grilled endlessly to name every other Communist in Hollywood and would not themselves have escaped reprisals unless they recanted their political beliefs." Dalton Trumbo provided his own answer to writer Victor Navasky: "Now you can argue that we could have said, 'Yes, I'm a member of the Communist Party and to hell with you,' but to do that was to imperil the whole principle of the right of political privacy, because by throwing it away in public you do not really preserve it... you set a pattern for others who are going to have to conform."

But Mr. Kramer objects that these would-be civil libertarians were really die-hard wood Stalinists. Indeed, one of the strengths of "The Front" is that the blacklisted writers are not depicted—as in the CBS-TV story of John Henry Faulk's tribulations—as falsely accused, thereby sympathizing. This fine and courageous movie shows one of the writers telling Howard Prince (Woody Allen) that he can no longer sell his scripts because he's a Communist sympathizer, to which Prince replies: "You always were."

Come now, Mr. Kramer, did anyone in Hollywood really need HUAC to tell them about the political sympathies of Dalton Trumbo, John Howard Lawson, Lester Cole or Albert Maltz? And what if these men did receive "huge salaries and specious glamour"? That side issue abstracts us from the real point for discussion. Does not any talented figure deserve the standard salary and benefits provided by the industry for whom he works? Are screenwriters who happen to be Communists, or Republicans, or Democrats, or radicals to be dismissed for irrelevant political reasons?

Mr. Kramer would have us take him as part of the camp of liberals who supposedly "regarded both Stalinism and the blacklist as threats to democracy." Certainly, many liberals embarrassed about their own acquiescence to McCarthyism and the Cold War today seek to explain themselves by adopting this posture. But when we look back, we find that the Cold War liberals adopted quite a different stance. We find ADA chairman Robert Bendiner arguing that Communists did not have the "right to belong to any and all organizations"; nor the right to hold government jobs. Defense of civil liberties for Communists, he wrote, only fostered "a self-defeating tolerance" that stimulated "repressive measures from the Right." His message: to avoid Right-wing repression, liberals should institute their own selective repression. One found anti-Stalinist liberals like Hubert Humphrey introducing the Communist Control Act before Congress, in the hope that a display of totalitarianism by the liberals would protect them from their enemies on the Right. Even Herbert Lehman put his name to that bill, with its provisions for the detention of suspected "subversives" in internment camps, upon declaration of an internal security emergency by the President. An aide to the Senator informed him that it was "a very bad bill" and would put an end to habeas corpus, but he noted it would "certainly impress the public with the fact that you are determined to act against communists." The psychology of those supporting this bill was the same as that espoused by Mr. Kramer: not all the accusations are false. Let us have legislation that has the real Communists put away. Let us have guilt by membership, although we forget about having to show commission of an individual's crime. Only guilt by association—that traps liberals—is bad. If the blacklist had only caught the real Communists!

Lillian Hellman, in her estimate that the Cold War liberalism of the 1950's led straight to Vietnam (the liberal's war, after all) and Watergate, proves to be a better historian than Mr. Kramer. For her own experience, as well as her reading of that tortured decade, points to an integral relationship between the Red hunt at home and the Cold War abroad. It appears that what Mr. Kramer really regrets is her decision to call quits on the Cold War, as well as the effort many in the movie industry to take a fresh look back. One even detects a note of sorrow on his part that Hollywood has stopped turning out anti-Communist tracts. The sins of the Stalinists, Mr. Kramer, do not excuse those committed by the Cold War anti-Communist liberals.

RONALD RADOSE

and the Graduate Faculty, History,
LOUIS MENASHE
Assoc. Professor of History,
Polytechnic Institute of New York

Mr. Kramer replies: "What has been swamped in the new ways of revisionism about both the sixties and the thirties." I wrote at the conclusion of my article on "The Black List and the Cold War," "Is the liberal view that regarded both Stalinism and the black list as threats to democracy—the view that looked upon both the conduct of the House Un-American Activities Committee and the values of the Communist Party as plagues to be resisted."

This judgment is abundantly—one might even say grotesquely—confirmed in the letters written by Cook, Radose, Menashe, Meeropol, Dyer and Foner, taking issue with my article.

For them, apparently, membership in the Communist Party was a kind of value-free phenomenon, devoid of political meaning or consequence, posing no problems for the Government, labor unions, the entertainment industry, the teaching profession or anyone else. Stalinism, both here and abroad, was likewise—in this view—an innocent rump. And several of these writers dare to call themselves historians!

It will certainly be interesting to see what sort of Trumbo biography Mr. Cook will write on such an assumption. As for Professors Radose and Menashe, their letter is a perfect example of the sort of revisionist history I had in mind. Note that there is not a word in it about the catastrophic concessions made to Stalin at Yalta when the U.S. was the strongest military power in the world. Note that there is not a word about the 1948 Communist coup in Czechoslovakia—and the role it played in mobilizing anti-Communist feeling in the Western democracies. All blame, in their view, goes to the "haughty and expansionist" foreign policy of the United States, and even the Stalinist takeover of Eastern Europe is somehow traced to America's malevolent intentions. The truth is, none of these revisionists can bring himself—even in 1976—to face the worst about Stalinism. And without an understanding of Stalinism, of course, the Cold War remains a mystery to them. Like the authors of "The Front," "Hollywood on Trial" and "Scoundrel Time" the revisionists still cannot bring themselves to face a simple fact: without Stalinism there would have been no McCarthyism and no Black List. I appreciate Alfred Kazin's letter, but I would like to point out that there is nothing in either my article or my "position" that supports the notion that I in any way condone either "social equalizer or the cruelist injustice."

snarled into place. There is a straight line from the Villa Foscari to Drayton Hall in Charleston, S. C., from the Fourth Book of Palladio to Peter Harrison's Redwood Library in Newport. The Villa Rotonda has infinite echoes.

The superb invention of the raised central pavilion linked with wings and outbuildings that served the country gentleman of Monticello and Mount Airy in Virginia so well came directly from Palladio's sublime organization of the Italian farm. Rudolf Wittkower has called his work a "true and emotional transformation of ancient models." That transformation continued in the fresh, ingenious and aspiring of the New World.

Jefferson professed his passion for Palladio openly. By his own admission, he fell madly in love with the "architecture," he said, "with delight." He had a continuing relationship with the Maison Carrée at Nîmes. It may or may not be a coincidence, but today's architects, rediscovering Jefferson's grand ideas. They are once again Italian villas and gardens, country houses and stately hotels, as infatuated as when with what they see. The new Palladio has undiminished meaning: a society that has attained equal social security to enjoy its past.

nudes in the Hellos exhibition, but photojournalism is represented by Brassa's ironically entitled "The Presentation," which shows a handful of naked whores being thoughtfully sprayed by a fully dressed client.

"Major" is a group of small one-person shows by ten Latin American photographers, five women and five men, all of whom have been photographing Latin American women. Organized by The Institute of Contemporary Hispanic Art with the assistance of En Foco, a group of New York-based Latin American photographers, and presented in the exhibition area of the McGraw-Hill Building, it includes a wide range of approaches to the common subject, ranging from Charles Bleasby's semi-abstract close-up of shoulders, hips and necks to Sandra Elias's quasi-journalistic pictures of life in the countryside of Panama.

There are some good pictures in "Major." I especially liked Lial Steiner's picture of three little girls at a blackboard, Roger Caban's thoughtful portrait of a young mother aged far beyond her years, and a beautifully lit interior with three women by Lydia Elber, Naomi Castell Simonetti's imitations and Frank X. Mendez's portraits were also noteworthy, and George Mave presented a moving record of prognancy and the first days of motherhood.

I wonder, however, how much "Major" really tells about the lives led by Latin American women. It differs from the usual theme show in that each photographer's work is hung separately, and though the pictures were specially commissioned by the Institute, each photographer was free to develop the theme in his or her own way. There are no captions or text blocks to tie the pictures together, and the very freedom granted the photographers to pursue their own goals militates against any systematic development of a theme.

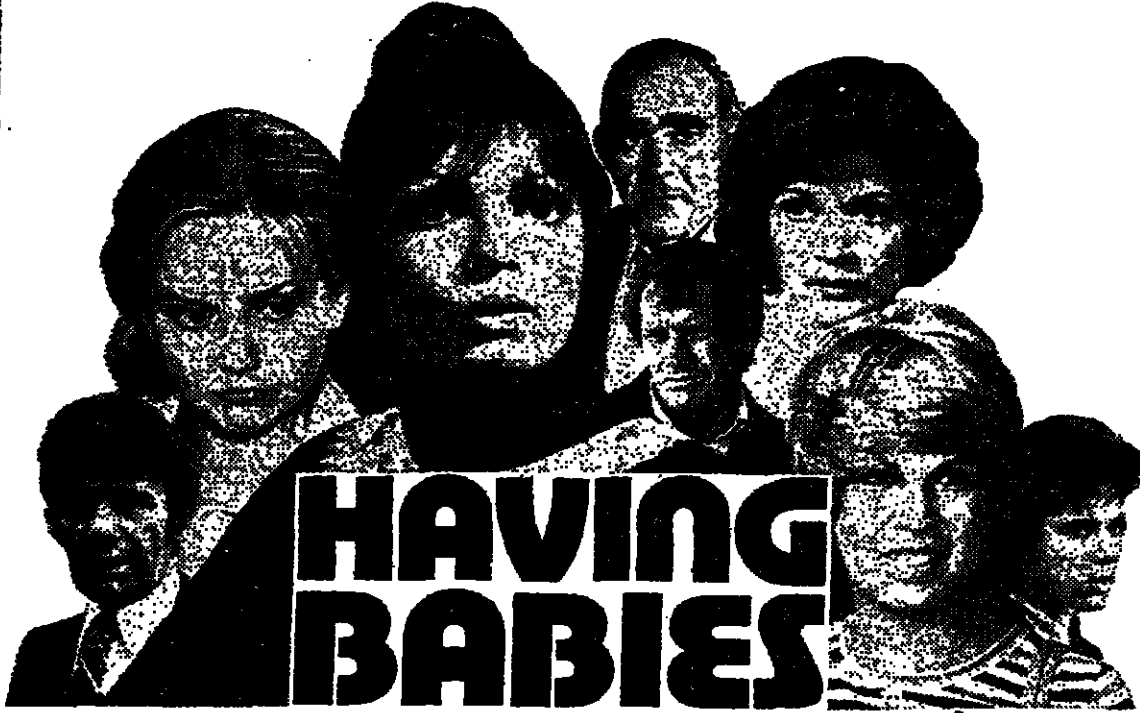

The result is a one-sided picture. I came away with the impression that Latin American women are poor wherever they live, but more picturesquely poor in the country than in the city. I learned nothing about the lives of working women at their places of work and next to nothing about the lives of middle and upper class Latin American women.

"The Still-Life in Photography" and "The Nude in Photography" at the Hellos Gallery, 18 East 67th Street. Through Oct. 30. Open Tuesday through Saturday, 10 A.M. to 6 P.M. "Major" at the McGraw-Hill Building Exhibition Area, 1221 Avenue of the Americas at 48th Street. Through Nov. 19. Open Monday through Saturday, noon to 6 P.M.

New Play Series Long on Talent, Short on Funds

The reason for "Visions," a weekly series of original dramas written specifically for television, was first glimpsed about six years ago, when the British Broadcasting Corporation's "The Forsyte Saga" captured international attention and opened a market in this country, on public TV, for "quality" imports. A few months later, perhaps in a similar vein, the Ford Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts, which American television seemed incapable of doing work on a similar level. Recommendations were made from professionals in the field, papers were published, conferences were held and an extensive new project was announced with appropriate headlines in the press. The resulting series, postponed several times, will begin on the Public Broadcasting Service Thursday at 9 P.M. "Visions" is a fascinating, though irritating, often brilliant accomplishment. Unfortunately, it is already doomed to a limited run of 24 episodes.

The premiere presentation is "Two Brothers," written by David Brumberg and directed by Burt Brinckerhoff. It features a ratty in the series, it features some well-acting faces: Judd Hirsch ("Delvecchio"), David Ladd ("The Practice") and Stephen Elliott ("Beacon Hill"). Hirsch plays the compulsively frustrated older brother of Spielberg, a psychotic who is barreling toward suicide in his anxiety to avoid going to a mental institution. Elliott, as a psychiatrist, is perfectly professional, as useless and helpless as anyone else is watching the psychotic's fear and frequently happens. He offers no easy consolations. In the end, Hirsch is bitterly reconciled: "To me the question is how did he last so long. . . I knew he was going and I let him go." Using videotape, and expanding the possibilities for that process considerably, "Two Brothers" generates its own peculiar and disturbing kind of power. Superbly acted, it is superior television.

Given this auspicious beginning, and the high level of achievement attained for at the least the next several weeks of the series, why has "Visions" encountered any difficulties at all? Barbara Schultz, executive producer of the series, concedes she has a number of unsubstantiated theories ("You get paranoid after a while") but is unable to pinpoint any single cause. She recalls the tentative beginnings in 1972 and 1973 when she was one of a group of interested parties that included Lloyd Richards, the stage director, Jac Venzla of WNET, Sean Sutton of the BBC and Andre Gregory, another stage director.

These and others with expertise in drama were summoned to Tarrytown, N.Y., to present papers before representatives of Ford, the NEA and public-TV stations. Miss Schultz says the general attitude on her side of the conference was, "What the hell is this?" But, as it turned out, the proceedings were serious and the participants left deeply impressed. In mid-1974, the new project was unveiled publicly, with Miss Schultz, whose TV credits included being in charge of "CBS Playhouse," named as producer and Los Angeles station KCET as the producing organization.

Miss Schultz proceeded on the understanding that a commitment of $10.2 million ($5 million from Ford and the NEA, $5.2 million from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting) would cover 36 original productions, with no strictures on length, made over a period of three years and presented on a regular weekly basis. The project quickly ran into problems with the Writers Guild, which did not want to negotiate a contract applicable only to "visions." This effectively eliminated "established" writers, likely to be Guild members, from consideration and forced Miss Schultz and staff to "really go out and find new writers." A settlement with the Guild was reached in March 1975, and some ownership for the writer was established after a production had its standard run and reruns on PBS.

But then, about a year ago, Miss Schultz discovered that her understanding of the deal may have been faulty. The CPB establishment in Washington began explaining that its commitment was only for $2.2 million. The rest would have to be raised elsewhere from corporations and foundations. Miss Schultz, and anyone else reading the initial proclamations for the press, had assumed that the need for additional funding would arise at the end of three years, when the series might have been solidly established. Not so. Therefore, "Visions," with funding of under $7 million, will reach a total of 24 productions and, barring sudden enlightenment in public-TV land, quietly expire next year.

Meanwhile, the series is getting off to a singularly impressive start. The fare is extremely varied. The writers have been given remarkable freedom, and the casts are of largely little-known but strikingly talented actors (the casting director is Jane Murray, who has contributed mightily to the success of the Norman Lear factory). On tap for the next few weeks: "The War Widow," by

Hirsch and Spielberg in "Two Brothers"—"offers no easy consolations"

Harvey Perr, about a gentle, young, married woman who finds herself entering a lesbian relationship while her husband is fighting in World War I (beautiful performances are contributed by Pamela Bellwood, Frances Lee McCain and Katharine Bard); "El Corrido," by Luis Valdez and the Teatro Campesino, a Mexican-American folk masque and ballad; "The Gold Watch," by Momoko Iko, a portrait of Japanese truck farmers living in the Pacific Northwest at the time of Pearl Harbor; and "Liz's Pioneer Diary," by Nell Cox, whose experience includes being an editor/camerawoman for Lescock/Pennebaker documentaries, follows the covered-wagon trek of a young Kentucky bride across the American plains of 1845.

Many of the writers for the series were recruited in New York, but "Visions" is hardly a New York series. It is simply a matter of most serious writers still gravitating toward New York. Many of the plays were written by women, but this is not a feminist series. At the very most, it may be redressing the imbalance that has kept talented women out of TV writing. With its emphasis on the writer, its determination to give the writer's concerns top priority, "Visions" is sprinkled with language, themes and certain anti-establishment postures that would hardly be welcomed on commercial television. Perhaps they have proven too sensitive for even public TV. While "Visions" is being cut off from further financing, CPB is announcing a $1 million "seedling" grant to Norman Lear, of all people, for a short-story series.

Miss Schultz is remarkably sanguine about the "visions" experience. She notes that she did indeed get to participate in 24 original productions, and that the series is undoubtedly an accomplishment in television. And she believes that other projects may develop for the writers and actors now being given a national showcase.

Miss Schultz allows herself an understandable note of bitterness, or at least distress, only when referring to the general state of serious drama on American television. "Let's Face It," she says, "it's difficult." Drama has limited mileage in terms of the mass audience. It usually cannot compete with blockbuster ratings. It is expensive, and it is risky, precisely because it seeks to explore beneath superficialities, precisely because it may prod and disturb. The bulk of TV productions, she says, tend to be journalistic and they succeed as far as they go. Probing, perhaps disturbing, analysis is discouraged. In the depressing end, at the reversed bottom line, Miss Schultz believes, "drama is simply not considered very important." That is the folly of American broadcasting. Only an occasional "visions" can bring the business a legitimate degree of worth.

Notes: The Fall Season Yields A Couple of Surprises

By LES BROWN

The new television season has produced two big surprises. One is that CBS is running third in the ratings race and has failed to dominate a single evening for the first three weeks of the competition, something that has never happened before. The other is that ABC's "Charlie's Angels," a sleeper to be sure, has burst forth into what people within the business call the "runaway" hit—the program that garners a tremendous rating the first week and doesn't lose it in subsequent weeks.

Such instant smashes are rare in television. There haven't been half a dozen of them in all the years since "The Beverly Hillsbillies" gave the critics the zazzberry in 1962. Even such huge national favorites as "Bonanza," "Laugh-In" and "All in the Family" started modestly, if not humbly, and gained their followings by degrees.

There will be no review of "Charlie's Angels" here, only a description for the benefit of those not among the 45 percent of the 10-o'clock-Wednesday viewers who already know all about it. It is three times the series that "Police Woman" is, because it has three times the pulchritude. A trio of unbiopic private-eyes, working for a man named Charlie who is heard but never seen (who needs him?), runs around solving crimes.

The three are smart, skilled in self-defense, fearless—but who isn't in television's world of law enforcement? What they are that poor Bumper Morgan is not, in the hapless competing series "The Blue Knight," is enormously sexy.

The leads in the show are Kate Jackson, Farrah Fawcett-Majors and Jaclyn Smith, hardly household words but, if the ratings hold up, probably soon to be. One suspects that the faithful admirers of their female heroics are not feminists but the gang that watches football on Monday nights.

As for the CBS surprise, it has mystified the handicappers. That unbeatable Saturday-night lineup, pivoting on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," has at least for now yielded to the force of "Starsky and Hutch" on ABC.

The old CBS "Monday-night habit" that began with "I Love Lucy" and continued for 20-odd years seems suddenly and inexplicably to be broken. A new ABC variety entry, "The Captain and Tennille," has been taking the measure of "Rhoda" and "Phyllis." CBS sit-coms that ranked in the Nielsen top 10 last year, The Norman Lear comedies are off form.

"Hawaii Five-O," "Barnaby Jones," "Sonny and Cher" and "Tony Orlando and Dawn"—old standbys—all bear strong signs of television's terminal disease: uncompetitive ratings. "Ball Four," a new entry, has the symptoms, too.

The first weeks of a new television season can never be trusted, say the sages, and the panic at Black Rock—as the CBS headquarters is affectionately called by its own—is contained for the moment by the hopeful belief that everything will snap back to normal when the political debates, the blockbuster movies and the World Series stop messing up the natural viewing inclinations of the millions.

CBS is not one of your "wait till next year" networks. If the viewing patterns don't spring back into shape pretty soon, the melodrama behind the box is likely to be more intriguing than any of the convoluted plot lines on the network's "Executive Suite."

Inflated Values

If $10 today buys what $5 did in the 1950's, then the notion that Barbara Walters is the highest-paid broadcast journalist who ever lived is somewhat inflated. Back in pre-inflation 1949, Lowell Thomas earned $502,300 from CBS for his various broadcast activities. Economists would figure that to be more than a Barbara Walters million in today's world.

The late Edward R. Murrow may have done almost as well a few years later. A filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission showed his CBS earnings to be more than $315,000 in

Barbara Walters: 'A million is a magic number.'

1955, and that was three years before he added "Small World" to his weekly television output of "See It Now" and "Person to Person," along with a raft of radio news programs.

John Daly, who was ABC's news chief and principal news personality during the early 1960's, was also in the big-money bracket, although a good share of his earnings came from his nonjournalistic sideline as host of the panel show "What's My Line?"

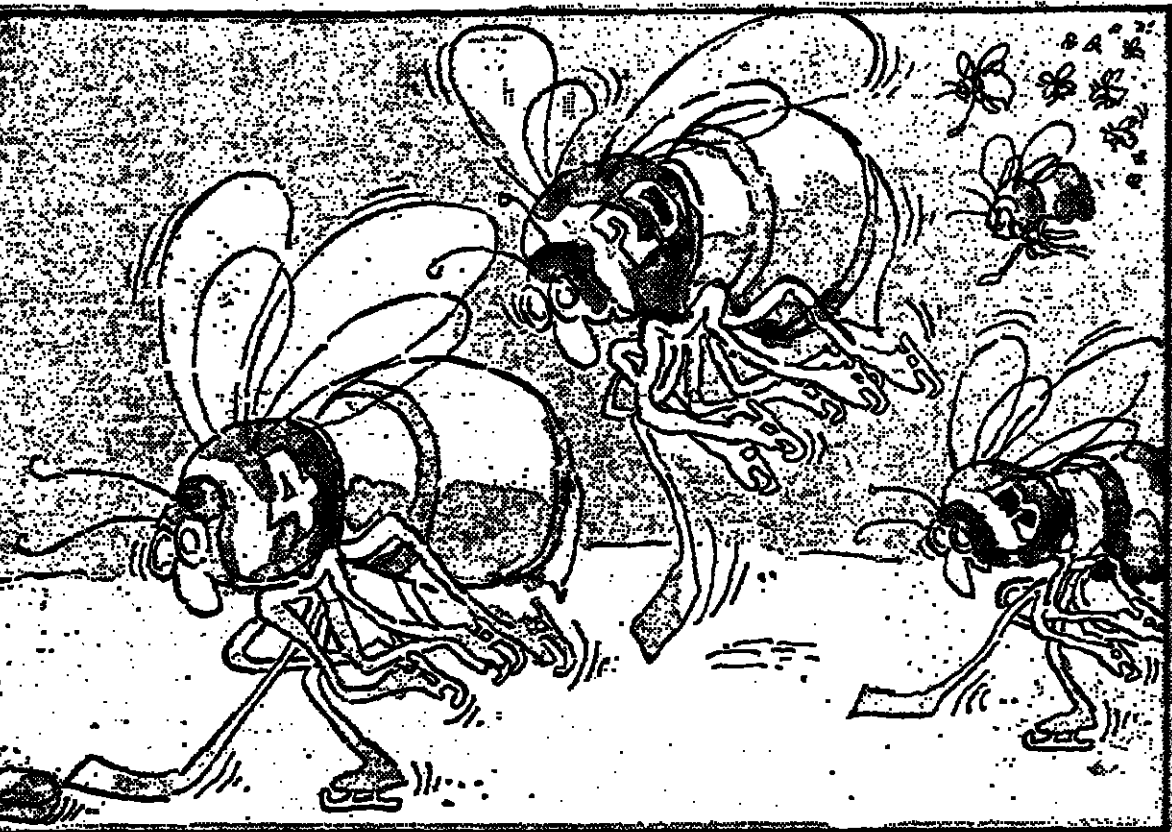

But although the salaries of Mr. Thomas and Mr. Murrow had been reported in the press and were considered in their time to be sums no less royal than what Miss Walters is receiving from ABC, there was little fuss over the fact that someone was reaping so large a reward from practicing journalism.

Certain contemporaries of Miss Walters have been earning more than $500,000 a year—indeed, some may even have come close to $1 million a year—from newscasting, narrating television documentaries, narrating institutional or Government films, conducting radio programs, contributing to special news reports, lecturing, speaking at banquets and writing magazine articles.

In addition to performing as co-anchor of the nightly newscast with Harry Reasoner, Miss Walters's highly publicized contract with ABC calls for a package of services that include four prime-time specials a year and around a dozen appearances as a panelist on "Issues and Answers."

As one who understands news, Miss Walters knows as well as anyone why her salary has received more attention than those of other highly paid journalists.

"A million is a magic number," she said in a recent news conference. "If I had been paid $5,000 less, there probably wouldn't have been all this commotion."

Desist. No more 'They're buzzing around like a bunch of bees.'

Hockey Announcers—Cool It!

By DAVID GRUNWALD

The game they describe ceases to be hockey and instead becomes some bizarre fantasy that pushes the armchair viewer into the world of the hype, the overused superlative, where nothing is what it seems. Players no longer skate, they come "flying in off the bench." They don't even fight, they "exchange greetings." Teams turn into "bees" or are "on fire, making things happen." Pucks turn into "ballets." It's not unusual for a goalie to have half-a-dozen "saves" of the night. If the puck does go in the net, too often it is not due to a lapse in the defense but because the scorer "just would not be denied." And always, hard-fought game or otherwise, the players "give you 60 minutes of hockey."

As for the players themselves, whether exceptional or mediocre, they are instinctively praised: "One of the exciting young players in the NHL"; "He can do it all"; "He just gives you everything all the time"; "He gives 100 percent"; "He's a gutsy hockey player, a great competitor"; "He's a bomb out there." And so are they all.

The platitudes and inanities are endless, destroying all sense of proportion and perspective: "This game should be a dandy"; "It's a big one"; "You can feel the electricity here right up in this booth"; "It's a question of too little too late"; "I've seen some dumb penalties, but that one takes the cake."

Last February, as the fading Rangers lost to the Minnesota North Stars, home viewers were told "the name of the game is skate and Minnesota is skating." The explanation? "After the Rangers held the cards for the first 12 minutes, Minnesota suddenly came alive." As unanswered goals mounted, this brilliant pronouncement was uttered: "Minnesota is skating like a lot of bees. Somebody has got to throw a net in their way." But the advice was to no avail, despite "a golden opportunity" to score toward the end.

A few weeks later, it was the Boston Bruins who were "buzzing around like a bunch of bees looking for the queen." They scored three goals in 40 seconds: "This is the three fastest goals we've seen in a long time." Before the first period ended, the Bruins scored again. "Oh," wailed the Ranger play-by-play man, "how a game can turn around."

Please, Cease, Desist. No more "super move," "super pass," "super play," "super save." No more belaboring the obvious: "They're down very bad, six to one." Just describe the game. Use simple, declarative sentences. The rest is superfluous. After all, not every young player can have "a great future in the National Hockey League," nor every game be "wild and woolly." ■

An Abundance of Bullins

One of the most visible playwrights OFF Broadway at the moment is ED Bullins. His "Home Boy," the 20th play in a projected 20-play cycle about contemporary American blacks, recently opened, and is still running at the Perry Street Theater. "Jo Anna," a drama about the trial of Jo Anna Little for the murder of her father, which sidetracked Mr. Bullins from his cycle, opened last week at the Theater at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, for one performance only (free). Mr. Bullins's new work, "The Devil Catchers," will be staged. This last drama is purported to be less a play than a reading incorporating poetry, chants and music, and taking for its theme a spiritual quest for identity and roots. (See Theater)

Feld Fall Season

Ellet Feld Ballet, the resident dance company of the New York Shakespeare Festival, opens its fall season tomorrow with a gala program which includes the premiere of "Impromptu," a solo work choreographed and performed by Brigit Keil of the Stuttgart Ballet, and a staging of the production of "A Soldier's Tale"—both of which will pop up frequently in repertory during the engagement. (See Dance)

Broadway at the Ballroom

The Ballroom is a SoHo restaurant (444 per John Casady) which looks like springtime all year round, and which turns over several of its walls to changing displays of art works by SoHo locals. During the evenings, an opaque white curtain is drawn to create a theatrical mood and the restaurant transforms itself into a cabaret. It's current entertainment is by Broadway songwriters performing their own works. Tuesday through next Sunday, Tom Jones and Harvey Schmidt, who are responsible for "The Fantasticks" phenomenon, will check and tickle some boys with Susan Waldron, the original lead in "The Fantasticks," an experimental production in 1959, will be the category. (See Music)

Avery Fisher Opening

This week Avery Fisher Hall, which has been under reconstruction for several seasons since mid-May, is ready to concert, all ears. On Tuesday, a gala Pension Fund benefit concert will inaugurate the new hall, but it's already sold out. On Thursday, the subscription season for the New York Philharmonic commences, and that's when the general public will have the opportunity to test the vibrations of Mahler's Symphony No. 3, under the direction of Pierre Boulez. As of press time, single tickets were still available. (See Music)

All About Portraits

"That which excites me the most, much more than the other things in my work—is the portrait, the modern portrait," said John Casady, who is exhibiting a number of other artists as well, leading to an exhibition opening Thursday at Wildenstein. More than 130 paintings, drawings and photographs have been assembled by artists from 1900 to the present, including minute portraits of influential figures in the 20th century. (See Art)

Pots of Bulbs Are a Shortcut to Spring

By CARLA WALLACE

Bulb potting is easy for even the youngest gardener.

Daffodils, tulips and hyacinths blooming in the living room in midwinter? Nothing could be simpler.

There are a few requirements: some pots, bulbs of your choice, ordinary potting soil and a dark, cool spot, 35 to 47 degrees for the required cooling period while bulb roots form.

The first step is to decide when you want the bulbs to bloom. This determines the planting time because bulbs require 12 to 15 weeks (depending on varieties) for roots to form and flowers to appear.

For a special party, such as an anniversary, birthday or one yearly big bash, show off the bulbs all at once.

For planting, any container will do, so long as it is twice as high as the bulbs and has a drainage hole at the bottom.

When selecting bulbs, buy the biggest, plumpest, firmest available. In many garden centers, some bins are filled with bulbs marked "for forcing".

Only one variety of bulb is planted in each pot instead of mixing several for a more dramatic impact.

which happens to me all the time, plant the bulb by itself in a small pot. The one perky flower will be just the right touch for a kitchen counter, the window sill of a bathroom or on a bedside table.

The bulbs need a cool period of 12 weeks to grow roots.

Now for planting. Place a layer of small, broken pieces of clay pots or gravel at the bottom of the pot.

Press the bulbs into the soil very gently but firmly and close enough together so that they are almost touching.

ing. Don't let the bulbs touch of the pots however.

In the case of tulips, the side of the bulbs (yes, they are side) facing the edge of the pot produces thick leaves which attractive frame for the flowers.

After planting, move the cool, dark place where they for a minimum of twelve unheated garage, cellar, etc. is great. So is a coldframe (if the prescribed temperature "trench method").

The latter involves digging enough to hold the pots, is, covering of drainage pipe, covering of sand over the pot, the emerging shoots. An six inches of soil forms a no ground level. Personally, I'll

A Photographer's Guide to Cooperative Galleries

In the last few years there has been an increasing trend on the part of photographers to get together and organize cooperative galleries in order to insure themselves of a means for exhibiting their work to the public, and of seeing what other contemporary photographers are doing.

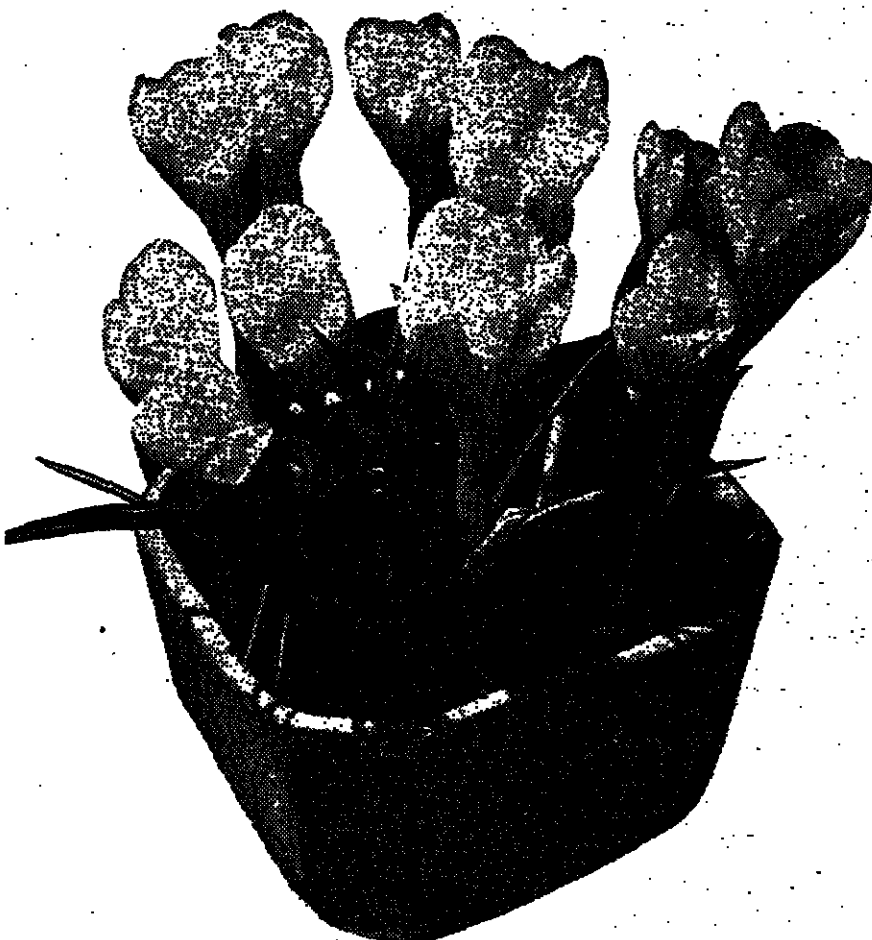

Although the primary purpose of all these galleries is to exhibit the works of their members, they do vary as to the methods they use to accomplish this objective, and as to how they are organized. Some have set up their own permanent galleries in which exhibitions are changed regularly; others get their exhibits together and then arrange to use existing galleries, exhibition halls or other public places for hanging their shows.

However, regardless of size or range of interests, the one thing that is

Hey, let's face it, I'm as interested in making a buck as the next guy. But the way I figure it, my books won't keep showing a profit if my customers keep seeing red. So I do everything I can to make sure they're tickled pink.

You see, at Hirsch Photo there's no such thing as absentee ownership. I'm there every day from 9:00 in the morning to 6:00 at night. Five days a week. Expertise on Display

Every expert who played a hand brilliantly took the trouble to write up his effort in a scrap-book, the biggest book in the world would surely belong to Alvin Roth. This durable New York expert has been winning titles for almost 40 years, and his brilliance and enthusiasm continue to be extraordinary. Almost every week he is competing in a tournament somewhere, usually in the metropolitan area. In winning the Open Pairs at the last New York tournament, he played a deal that would be a good candidate for the best hand of 1976. Steward card-placing generated an imaginative play and led to an unusual ending. Roth has always been a believer in "sound" opening bids, so he passed as South with a hand which many would open. He bid his heart suit on the second round at the three-level, after the opponents had bid and supported spades, and was raised to game. West led the spade king and shifted to the club ace. He continued with the club six, and East won with the queen and led a trump. Roth had lost three tricks, and he faced a problem in the diamond suit. Almost any tournament player would proceed on the assumption that West held the diamond queen, but Roth did some careful analysis. He reasoned that East would not have raised one spade with a 5-point hand. It was highly likely that he held the diamond queen as well as the king and queen of clubs. Relying on this assessment, Roth won with the heart ace, led to the heart king and led the diamond jack. This backward finesse gave him a chance of four diamond tricks if West began with 10 x x in diamonds, not an unlikely situation. East covered the diamond jack with the queen, justifying the declarer's analysis, and the king won. A club was ruffed, bringing down the jack. East's remaining trump was drawn, and the

The lead of the trump jack now ruined West. If he had thrown a diamond, he would have allowed the declarer to score three tricks in that suit by finessing the nine. He therefore threw a spade, and Roth promptly threw a spade from dummy, finessed the diamond nine and ruffed a spade to establish the jack and bring home his game.

Cooperative Galleries

These cooperative photo galleries have in common is that the work to be exhibited is chosen by the members themselves, not by a single director who may choose work because it has a high market value, or because a photographer's work has wide public acceptance.

For those photographers interested in joining or learning more about a cooperative of this kind, here are some facts about some that have been operating for a while in the New York area:

The Soho Photo Gallery, 34 West 13th Street, N.Y.C. This is a large co-op gallery with about 300 members, from beginners to professionals, who use all kinds of techniques and cover every type of subject matter. The gallery is in a large loft designed by a member-architect and built by the members, with space arranged so that six different shows can be put on simultaneously. Exhibits are changed monthly, and in a single visit one can see experimental work, collages, reports, still lifes, portraits and nature photographs.

At the front of the loft is the Alfred Stieglitz Gallery, for special large exhibits. I have seen shows there on a level with some of the best work I've seen in major museums—Cornell Capa's "Margin of Life" a moving reportage of the poor of Honduras and El Salvador; "Street Scenes of London" taken in the late 1800's by John Thomson; and "Chinatown, a View from the Inside," by Rich Chu, a young member-photographer, with full text and captions. This last was a loving reportage of a little-known way of life that the photographer is part of and knows well.

The Soho Photo Gallery is open every weekend. Tuesday nights are for planning upcoming shows, hearing speakers, engaging in critiques, and reviewing portfolios from photographers interested in joining. Soho has established a connected group of galleries in Los Angeles, in Philadelphia, and in New Orleans, with a program for exchanging exhibits. A membership in one Soho gives one membership in all the others.

The Minority Photographers, 67 East 4th Street, N.Y.C. This is a street that has many off-Broadway theatres on it. The gallery is open every afternoon and evening except Mondays. They support themselves with membership dues, hanging fees, and grants.

They also move their shows to other places, and recently moved their show "Rhythms of Vision" to the Loeb Student Center in New York University.

The Minority Photographers received a grant from the New York State Bicentennial Commission, for a project on the Lower Eastside, and used this grant to introduce photography to children in the area's public schools.

The Third Eye Gallery at 17 Seventh Avenue South in Greenwich Village, is a 14-member group who wish to remain small and concentrated, and to emphasize personal development. They keep their gallery open 6 days a week and describe themselves as "a collectively run, non-profit gallery." They support themselves through membership dues, hanging fees, fund-raising parties, print sales, and grants. In June, they had a grant-sponsored show of a variety of experimental forms in photography. They also tried out a new exhibit technique which requires exhibiting photographers to keep adding new work while the show was up. Like most of the other galleries they welcome outside work. All the members take part in hanging the shows, which change every month.

En Foco (Spanish for In Focus), 250 Riverside Drive, N.Y.C. This is "a collaborative of Latin-American photographers to give Latin-Americans knowledge and appreciation of themselves, and to show others "what we're all about." They do not have their own gallery and exhibit wherever they can; in street festivals, government offices, cultural centers, neighborhood clubs, colleges, and major museums.

They got started about three years ago when The Institute of Contemporary Hispanic Art, 14 East 60th St., N.Y.C., invited 12 Latin photographers to photograph here and in Puerto Rico for an exhibit called "Dos Mundos" (Two Worlds of the Puerto-Rican). This show opened at the New York Cultural Center, and then traveled to Washington, D.C., Los Angeles, and San Juan, P.R. Three of the photographers decided to continue and so formed En Foco, which has grown to 35 photographers. They applied for and received a grant for another show, "En Esta Vida" (In This Life), that was widely exhibited.

Crossroads Gallery, 2639 Broadway N.Y.C. This gallery exists on the walls of a large game club called, Chess City. One night, about 3 years ago, Baruch Katz, a professional photographer, went there to play chess, looked around and thought "What a great place for a photo gallery." He spoke to the owners, who agreed with him, and thought how wonderful to have their bare walls decorated with photographs. They covered the walls with wallboard painted grey, and Crossroads Gallery was born.

Many good photographers live nearby, and they were happy to exhibit. The gallery has become well-known, and photographers from all over the country send their work in for exhibition. Chess City is open seven days a week until midnight, so the shows get lots of exposure.

The Gallery of the Camera Club of New York, 37 East 69th Street, N.Y.C. Established in 1887 "for the express purpose of presenting the photographic print in a serious fashion as an art form," this is undoubtedly the great grand-daddy of all the coop galleries. Ten shows a year are presented, with 3 of them for photographers outside the club, and 2 for club members. "It's our contribution to the photographic community at large," explains one of the officers of the club. Any photographer can submit a portfolio to a five-member committee for review. The club gives each exhibitor an opening night party, takes care of all the publicity, and gives the full amount of any print sales to the exhibitor.

to the building wall as possible for maximum protection.

City gardeners without a terrace or fire escape still have the refrigerator! One never has a large enough refrigerator so that donating some of its precious space to a few pots of bulbs demands dedication, but it's worth it. Look at it this way. You'll not only get glorious flowers in midwinter, but you'll eat less for twelve weeks and think of the weight you'll lose.

Cover the pots with plates, foil or paper towels to keep them dark and the refrigerator clean. Bulb pans are best for refrigerators as opposed to regular-sized ones because they'll easily fit under the shelves.

Get down the date when the bulbs were potted so you know when the three months are up. Label each pot as to variety so that if you wish to repeat any favorites the following year, you'll have the names.

The only maintenance that is required for pots of bulbs is making sure the soil is kept moist. Keep checking all through the 12 weeks, watering as needed to keep the soil moist but not wet. A fertilizer is not needed since the bulb is a totally self-sufficient plant, replenishing and storing its own food. And now comes the fun part. After 12 weeks, take a peek and see if the shoots are three to six inches high (in the case of hyacinths, the bud should be well out of the neck of the bulb), in which case the pots can be brought indoors to a semi-dark, cool area of the house for further growth, about a week or so. Otherwise, leave the pots out for another two weeks or more. When leaves and buds begin to appear, move the pots to a more lighted area indoors, watering regularly. The flowers will appear in all their glory!

The only care needed is careful watering to keep the potting soil moist but not soaking wet.

Bulbs cannot be forced to bloom a second year, but don't discard them if you have a garden. After the flowers have faded, cut them off, leaving the leaves intact, and keep the pots in a bright area. Once the ground outdoors is workable, plant the bulbs in the garden. The leaves will draw the strength necessary from the sun and water to produce flowers in future years. Daffodils and minor bulbs especially will give many more years of flowers.

Suggested varieties listed below have been tested by Michigan State University's Department of Horticulture and found to be excellent for forcing. They are in plentiful supply at garden centers, nurseries and catalog firms. "R" next to the name indicates an early variety, requiring only twelve weeks of cooling. "L" means a late variety, needing a fifteen-week cooling period.

For the Birds

Most of the summer birds have migrated to warmer climates and the resident birds are setting in for the winter months ahead. The ritual of filling the feeders will soon begin. And the ever changing delight of feathered visitors will brighten even the dullest day.

Just to be sure that the right sort of goodies are offered these feathered guests, here are some pointers on the things they like to eat. Sometimes people fail to attract certain species because they do not offer the kind of foods needed. Insect eating birds are attracted to suet, the fat trimmings from meat, particularly beef. Woodpeckers delight in hanging from bags of suet tied to a tree. So do nuthatches, titmice and chickadees.

Seed eaters will draw scores of sparrows, jays, cardinals, finches and chickadees. Goldfinches favor thistle seed and the grosbeaks prefer sunflower seed.

A word of caution on wild bird seed mixes sold in supermarkets. Read the labels for content. Many of the so-called bargain bags are weighted with worthless filler. Good wild bird seed mixes should contain hemp, sunflower, millet, buckwheat with some ground oyster shells for grit. A few of the better grade mixes include peanut chunks.

This Week: Start leaf compost pile. Continue planting bulbs, evergreens, perennials, groundcovers. Store tender roots and bulbs—gladiolus, canna, dahlias, tuberous begonias—in a cool dry place.

Preventive Action

Many types of fungus diseases overwinter on foliage and decayed fruits. Three of the most troublesome in the metropolitan region are rose black spot, apple scab and peach leaf curl. The usual approach is full force attack with fungicides in late spring and summer, when these diseases make their appearance.

The far better course is to do a little preventive spraying now. Any of the standard fungicides will do. Two favorites are benomyl or phalitan, especially for rose black spot.

For the fruit trees benomyl, captan, maneb or ferbam will do. Follow label directions; spray thoroughly. Added good deeds: clean up fallen leaves and burn, don't compost, and pick off any mummified fruit.

Plants and Motherhood

George J. Ball, Inc., a giant in the horticultural supply industry, wonders about the current market trend toward cut flower sales in nonflorist outlets such as chain stores and supermarkets. They put some questions to Dr. George Kress, professor of marketing at Colorado State University, which is answered in the company's monthly, Grower Talks. In discussing the industry's effort to put more cut flowers into high traffic markets, such as supermarkets, where most of the shoppers are women, Dr. Kress theorized that women view cut flowers as a luxury and don't buy them. Mentally, they can justify the purchase of a plant because it becomes part of the house display. The boom in house plant sales is evident almost everywhere.

He added, "I have a pet theory about the fantastic increases in the demand for potted plants. It is related to the increased use of birth control methods and the accompanying decrease in average family size. The maternal 'instincts' of women can't be fully realized with no children or small families, so they turn their attentions to a child substitute, something they can nurture and take care of—plants."

Not wanting to neglect the men gardeners, Dr. Kress was queried by telephone if he had anything more to add. He suggested that the increased purchase of plants for single male households indicates protective tendencies among men, too.

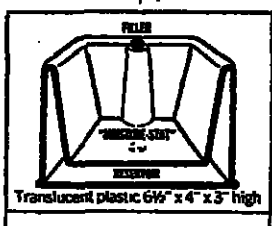

Dr. Kress does state that he doubts if his theories "will be warmly accepted by women liberals, but it does partially explain the increased demand for potted plants with no accompanying demand in cut flowers—an item that can't be mothered."

Short Day Plants

Poinsettias, leftover from last Christmas, kalanchoes and Christmas cacti have one thing in common. They are sensitive to the length of day and the shorter the day, the better they bloom. Those who have had trouble encouraging these plants to flower in time for the holidays might like to try controlling the length of the plants' day to initiate flowering. From 5 P.M. until six or seven o'clock the next morning, these plants should be in absolute darkness. If they are in an extra bedroom or storage room, only one goof—turning on a light to get something, will throw the plants' clocks off.

The long night plants are cared for normally in their sequestered existence with adequate water, light fertilizer

Lockheed Gets Off the Ground

Problems Linger, But Defense Money Pours In for Biggest Military Contractor

By ROBERT LINDSEY

BURBANK, Calif.—The headquarters of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation here has been like a vast bunker under siege for much of the last seven years, but the people inside are starting to look out these days and think maybe the worst is over.

Similar periods of relief have brightened the mood here intermittently since 1969, when revelations of huge cost overruns on Lockheed's C-5A transport plane began what was to become an almost constant battle for corporate survival.

Nevertheless, in recent weeks more and more outside analysts have begun saying that, this time, the beleaguered company may at last have begun to turn around. The optimism is cautious and qualified. It stems from a number of things that have happened recently and some things that did not happen.

On Sept. 29, Lockheed shareholders approved a long-delayed refinancing plan that will reduce the company's debt moderately, make its 24 banks part-owners of Lockheed and give the company more time to pay off its remaining debts to the banks.

do anything else. Still, industry analysts could point out that the refinancing was evidence that the banks had decided not to pull the plug on the company—and that they appeared reasonably pleased with the company's present management, following a shakeup last winter during the height of the international furor over Lockheed's overseas bribes.

One of the reasons for the banks' decision to stick with Lockheed was that, behind the headlines over its overseas bribes and the undeniable problems in selling its L-1011 TriStar jetliner, the company has been doing a booming business with the Pentagon, producing earnings that are helping to whittle down its enormous debt.

Lockheed dominates four major military markets in this country: airlift; antisubmarine warfare aircraft; strategic reconnaissance; and submarine-launched ballistic missiles. In the view of most analysts, the outlook is for continued high spending in these areas, regardless of whether President Ford or Jimmy Carter occupies the White House after Jan. 20.

Lockheed recently salvaged an order for almost $700 million worth of antisubmarine warfare planes from Canada and landed a $825 million order for air traffic control systems in Saudi Arabia. This indicates its image in the international market has not been completely devastated by the pay-off scandals.

What encourages some outsiders is that Lockheed is still intact after becoming the centerpiece in the most explosive series of scandals in international business in modern times. Admissions that it paid more than $20 million in bribes abroad in connection with the sale of aircraft have shaken the governments of Japan and The Netherlands and caused lesser ripples in several other nations.

Earlier this year, it appeared that [the pay-off scandal] could well lead to a major crisis in terms of the U. S. Government's relationship with the company," said Wolfgang H. Demisch, an aerospace stock analyst for Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Company. "They seem to have lived through that crisis, and the situation now is that with the money, it has coming in on its military operations, Lockheed is in a better position than it was a year ago."

Heads Rolling in the Board Room

By ISADORE BARMASH

Since last November, in a sometimes bloody, sometimes bloodless tide, heads have rolled in the top-management suites of 20 of America's best-known companies.

At that time, it was becoming evident to corporate boards all across the land that the national economic recovery was soundly based and, perhaps, now was an opportunity to plan management changes to take maximum advantage of the improving business climate.

Although the theory may, in fact, amount to no more than a fanciful notion, there are knowledgeable executives, recruiters and consultants who are convinced that it contains at least some grains of validity. John D. Arnold, president of Applied Synergistics Inc., in Waltham, Mass., who is a believer in the November-February Massacre concept, said, "Directors agreed that with the economic turnaround, their company needed to go into a different direction," or decided "we have to revitalize the management team," or it's vital "to develop a common vision on our identity and role."

These euphemisms aside, the message was clear: "It's time for a change," said Mr. Arnold, a senior management consultant. But others believe that there are additional reasons for the rapid turnover in top-management echelons: "Confusion over whether the economy has truly turned around has created uncertainty, while the continuing inflation and the erratic stock market have meant that good corporate performance hasn't necessarily been reflected in the price of a company's stock. 'We've always had change,' said Mrs. Meyer of Handy Associates. 'Now we have instability and uncertainty and corporations are on the defensive.'"

"Company directors, partly in defense against criticism and partly because they are increasingly in the public spotlight, are much more aggressive than they were a year ago."

"No sector has been immune, ranging from traditionally sedate businesses, such as insurance and finance, to the faster-paced industries, like electronics," Mrs. Meyer added.

In previous weeks, the ax fell often and sometimes spectacularly. Anthony Conrad, after informing his directors that he hadn't filed Federal income tax returns for five years, was asked to depart as chairman of the RCA Corporation. J. W. Richard Gordon found he had irreconcilable differences with the board at the Johns-Manville Corporation and resigned as president. John W. Bergen gave up the presidency of the Starkey Corporation under pressure.

The reshuffling of the management deck in so many sectors of American industry has given rise to a theory that has come to be known as the "November-February Massacre," in that the plans for corporate shakeups in many cases apparently were laid in that four-month period spanning the end of 1975 and the beginning of 1976.

"No sector has been immune, ranging from traditionally sedate businesses, such as insurance and finance, to the faster-paced industries, like electronics," Mrs. Meyer added.

In previous weeks, the ax fell often and sometimes spectacularly. Anthony Conrad, after informing his directors that he hadn't filed Federal income tax returns for five years, was asked to depart as chairman of the RCA Corporation. J. W. Richard Gordon found he had irreconcilable differences with the board at the Johns-Manville Corporation and resigned as president. John W. Bergen gave up the presidency of the Starkey Corporation under pressure.

landmark Hochfelder decision last March, "strikes right at the heart of S.E.C. enforcement technique," according to Glenn W. Clark, a former Iowa securities superintendent, and other specialists in securities law. The S.E.C. charged that in 1972 Mr. Schuman gave securities analysts significant information, including a profit estimate, that had not yet been made public.

The judge, Robert J. Ward, held that the S.E.C. in seeking an injunction against continued violations, had to prove not only that the information was improperly given but also that it was supplied with intention to deceive. (The earnings estimate did turn out to be inaccurate.)

Evil intention—the legal term is "scienter"—had been held necessary in the Hochfelder case but the Supreme Court had left open the question as to whether it applied also to S.E.C. injunctive action. In turning down the S.E.C. request for an injunction in the Bausch & Lomb case, Judge Wald made the application clear.

"Bausch & Lomb stands the law on this subject on its head," wrote securities lawyer Edward Brodsky in the New York Law Journal. "Now the commission's burden will be more difficult than that of the private litigant because in addition to proof of willfulness the commission also must show proof of a reasonable likelihood that the securities laws will be violated in the future." Stanley Sporkin, head of the S.E.C.'s enforcement division, agreed. "It's going to hurt us if that's the law," he said.

In fact, some say, the commission has been acting for the past five to 10 years more like a private party than a regulatory agency, frequently seeking, for example, to force defendants to return their ill-gotten profits. The turning point for the Court under Chief Justice Warren E. Burger was the case of Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, which the court decided June 9, 1975. That case narrowed considerably the class of people entitled to recovery for misrepresentation by holding that one had to have actually purchased or sold the securities in question. The ruling went against plaintiffs who said they were defrauded into not buying securities that were required to be offered them in a merger.

This was a significant finding, but by itself it would probably not have aroused a particular concern. Blue Chip is not the world's worst decision on the merits," said Mr. Pitt of the S.E.C. "So what if you have to be a purchaser or seller. The number of people who have legitimately been aggrieved but are not going to be able to sue in Federal Court is very limited, I suspect." But the Court went further than this in seeking to justify its limitation. It held that since policy judgments prompted the recognition of an implied right of private action under the S.E.C.'s general antifraud rule, so too could policy justify limiting the scope of such remedies. This meant that the Court didn't want Federal Courts used to settle every grievance and appeared also to reflect a desire to prevent undue interference with business.

Struthers Wells and Secondary Oil Recovery

Struthers Wells pioneered the development of commercial sized steam generators for secondary oil recovery during the early 1960s. Since that time its Struthers Thermo-Flood subsidiary has continued to set the industry's engineering and performance standards on secondary oil recovery steam generators for both domestic and export installations.

Worldwide Fertilizers. Power. Petroleum. Environment. Energy Recovery.

Domestic companies planning overseas installations can also secure the same Struthers Wells' engineering expertise and fabrication know-how that is available in the United States, in many of the major industrial countries of the world. ## M.D. Portfolios—Doing Poorly

By SHARON JOHNSON

LOS ANGELES—There's a sucker born every minute. Phineas Taylor Barnum once said.

Apparently a good many of them grew up to be doctors.

"Almost every physician I know has been the victim of some unscrupulous businessman," said Dr. Elias Amador, a Los Angeles pathologist. "These businessmen promise doctors the moon if only they will give them their life savings to invest in some venture, that turns out to be worthless."

Dr. Amador speaks from experience. He gave a California developer $25,000 to invest in a San Francisco apartment complex that was supposed to yield an annual profit of 10 percent and substantial tax writeoffs. The developer even promised to manage the building so that Dr. Amador and the other physician-investors would be free to pursue their medical research.

"On paper, it looked like the deal of the century," Dr. Amador explained the other day as he leafed through the stacks of calculations of income and expenses provided by the developer. "Little did I know that the businessman's predictions of occupancy rates and maintenance costs were about as factual as Alice in Wonderland."

Everything went smoothly initially, but then Dr. Amador received a letter from the developer stating that there would be no profits the first year because of unexpected bills for plumbing repairs.

"I should have gotten out then, but I waited for four years because I was simply too greedy," Dr. Amador admitted.

Physicians are the best paid professionals in the nation, and like everybody else with lots of money, they're eager to find profitable and tax-dodging investments. That makes them targets for get-rich-quick schemes, and Dr. Amador is not alone in his loss. Two general practitioners in New Hampshire lost $54,800 to a clever con man who persuaded them to invest in several failed auto agencies. A group of Chicago surgeons gave $500,000 to a Colorado developer to build a ski resort but he gambled the money away in Las Vegas. A Westchester County gynecologist paid $200,000 for a Florida orange grove that turned out to be a worthless swamp.

"Stealing from doctors is the safest business in the world because they have plenty of money, will invest in anything, and won't sue even if they are victimized," said Richard I. Wideman, a Los Angeles attorney who has represented numerous physicians. "The average physician earns more than $80,000 a year and is constantly looking for investments. Unfortunately physicians rarely invest in anything they know, such as hospitals or drug companies. Instead they concentrate on glamorous, high risk ventures, such as land speculation or moviemaking, where they lose their shirts."

Dr. Michael Halberstam, a Washington D.C. cardiologist and author, believes that doctors make poor investments because they expect people to tell them the truth.

"The doctor-patient relationship is based on trust, and doctors carry that over into their personal lives," Dr. Halberstam theorizes. "If a developer tells them, he will double the doctors' investment in five years, they assume he will do so rather than looking for proof."

"Even if the doctor does select a safe investment initially, he can get into financial difficulty later on because he doesn't have time to check up on the developer to determine if he's making good use of the doctor's money," said Dr. Halberstam.

"Doctors are much smarter and better educated than the businessmen who exploit them, but unfortunately they have never studied anything that would help them to understand business risks," said Mr. Wideman, the attorney. "As undergraduates, doctors concentrated on science courses and avoided economics and accounting because they were afraid that they might get low grades in these subjects and would not be admitted to medical school. Most medical schools don't even teach physicians how to manage an office let alone how to invest their profits so it is not surprising that doctors finish their training with a degree that enables them to earn $100,000 a year, but lacking the knowledge to understand an annual report."

"Most people learn to manage money gradually but not doctors who go from poverty to prosperity overnight," Mr. Wideman continued. "Until they are in their 30's, most doctors don't have to worry about how to invest money because they are broke. While all their friends are getting good experience investing small amounts in the stock market or in government bonds, the medical student and his wife are scrambling by on what she earns at some low-paying job and he earns moonlighting in a hospital emergency room. Then he goes into practice and makes $30,000 the first year. He does not know what to do with it because he has as much knowledge of financial investment as a 14-year-old boy."

A doctor's wife in Los Angeles puts it this way: "They shouldn't be trusted with anything more than their lunch money."

The fear of paying huge taxes is the main reason why doctors make poor investments, according to Dr. Arthur Meyer, a Los Angeles anesthesiologist. "Doctors are in an impossible dilemma. They can invest in nothing and pay 50 percent of their income in taxes or try to shelter their incomes and lose 70 percent to some unscrupulous businessman," said Dr. Meyer.

Dr. Meyer and several other physicians invested their life savings in an Oakland, Calif., apartment complex. He said the developer promised them that they would save thousands of dollars in taxes each year. Unfortunately he failed to tell them that all the tenants were relatives of the former owner and planned to move as soon as the building was sold. They lost, and Dr. Meyer and his associates were left with a vacant building requiring extensive repairs.

"It is a rare doctor who can evaluate business risks," says Dr. Will Kirby, a business consultant with Professional Management Inc. of Greenville, S.C. "They don't know how to attack the premises of business. They don't ask how can you be sure we will have a 90 percent occupancy rate? We do you have for believing the things you will only pay for? If the numbers add up, even if they are explained, you should see to recover their loss. The controversy over medicine has made physicians reluctant to consult lawyers and accountants they think they will be a fortune. A senior accountant in Los Angeles might charge $20 an hour for a possible business investment doctor, but the average physician invests $50,000 without consulting a body."

Doctors also prefer to absorb without a whimper. A few, like Amador are resorting to the courts. He won his suit in a California court. Dr. Meyer is taking an approach. Mrs. Meyer has enrolled in real estate school.

"I hope that she will learn how to find some good real estate investments so that I can go back to my journals and stop worrying about investments," said Dr. Meyer. "I know she might start a new specialty in medicine—wives as financial sors."

He Leads them to Shelters

LOS ANGELES—In paring a doctor from his money, Leverage Funding Systems, an Oakland-based investment company, might be said to be the expert.

The company was set up in 1970 by Peter Traynor and has specialized in such tax shelters as movie and real estate syndications, with insurance sales as a sideline and emphasis on the medical profession as the source of investment money.

One of the best sources was the Martin Luther King Jr. Hospital in Los Angeles, where, according to Dr. Elias Amador, one of the investors there, 22 physicians invested from $5,000 to $80,000 each in movies and/or real estate syndications. Most of them, Dr. Amador said, had to borrow from banks to meet the payments and two of them lost all the retirement money received from the Armed Forces. Many had been referred to Leverage Funding by one of their colleagues, who, it turned out, was on Leverage Funding's payroll.

Later this month, a Marin County Superior Court is expected to award damages to three Los Angeles physicians who invested in a $1.92 million apartment complex in Lakeside, Calif., in December 1972. Within a month of making their investment, the doctors were informed that it had been decided to convert the project into condominiums. They were asked to sell the property back to Leverage Funding Development, the corporation (owned by Leverage Funding Systems) from whom they had purchased it.

The doctors did sell it back for $1.07 million. What they were not told, the court found, was that Leverage would be selling the condominiums for an additional $1.4 million. Last month, the court ruled that Leverage Funding Systems had committed fraud.

The case is the company's latest legal setback. Prior to that, the Securities and Exchange Commission filed a civil complaint against Mr. Traynor and a maze of his movie-making enterprises—Cinema Films, L-T Films and Peter Traynor Films among them. The claim was that Mr. Traynor collected more than $1.5 million to put into foreign movies which never were started. The money, however, had been spent. The case, brought in July 1973, was resolved the next day with a consent decree prohibiting the practice.

Leverage Funding Systems offered as investment vehicles not only real estate but also a series of films emphasizing sex and violence. They ranged from "Steak-Arena," which concerned a devil dancer, to "Truck Stop Wars" and "Ultimate Thrill." Most were signed to be shown at drive-ins.

The promise of the low-budget was quick profits. The reality, however, was production delays and unexpected costs. In 1974, for example, Leverage raised $750,000 for a film called "Billy." Originally, it was to tell the story of a one-armed man who became a successful career as a basketball player. But the subject refused to cooperate with the screen writer, the story then changed to the biography of a con artist, and "Billy" in fact was made.

Still, Leverage finds doctor-investors. One reason is the glowing reports and Mr. Traynor have gotten in several Los Angeles newspapers, Correio Magazine, Medical Economics, among others. According to Mr. Traynor, one doctor old friend to whom Mr. Traynor sold his first $200,000 life insurance policy, posed as a happy investor in the article in Medical Economics, being a reporter that he had invested early films—which he had not done. But the doctors might accept a part of the blame themselves. According to Mr. Traynor, none ever asked to see a film budget or script and most did even care about the title. As Mr. Traynor describes it:

"My investors basically say to me, 'We believe in you, Peter. You take money and combine it with the doctor's money and make the picture. That you can make for money and do the best job for us you can.'"

When are you ready for your own personal money manager?

Sooner than you think. Actually, you may be ready right now to move up to the advantages of personal money management. And not even know it.

Easy for us to say? Easy for you to prove:

You're ready if your business and personal activities don't leave time to follow economic trends and investment opportunities in today's complex market. You're ready if your portfolio is just "getting along" on your part-time efforts in a financial climate that requires full-time attention by a professional—a qualified securities expert who'll work as hard at conserving your wealth as you do at creating it.

You're ready if your current investment activities are a grab-bag of buy-and-sell, instead of a carefully structured program of realistic financial goals. Ready for a personal money manager who will help you define those goals—retirement income, an inflation hedge, current income, whatever—and design a sensible strategy to help you meet them.

(It may include stocks, bonds, commercial paper, options, U.S. Treasury Bills or other investment alternatives. Where your assets are placed, and when, are determined solely by what your personal money manager considers best for your individual financial objectives.)

You're ready even if you're not a huge private investor or an institution; ready if you have assets of $25,000 or more that you want working for you in a coordinated program.

Now that you know how ready you really are, there's just one more question: Which money management firm will do the best job for you?

Sanford C. Bernstein & Co., Inc. pioneered the concept of money management for the individual investor. Back in 1967, we developed the ideas and innovations many other companies are just now discovering. And we believe that today, 1976, we've got a beat on everyone else.

Men Who's Not Coming to Lunch

Sharon Rubin

LIE SALAMON
Sharon Rubin writes on the scene in Los Angeles.

The Bohemians, he said, are not vulnerable to pressures to integrate because the club's orientation is purely social and cultural. Conducting business inside the club is considered bad taste.

Many women, however, disagree with that assessment.

"Anyone who says private clubs are merely social places is not being realistic," said Mariel For, group vice-president and senior consultant for the New York public relations firm Carl Byoir and Associates. "Business relationships are made and enhanced at lunch; it's a big part of doing business."

Private men's clubs, others say, are integral links in the old-boy network. "Whenever a male executive needs an attorney or other professional, he usually selects someone he knows from his club," said Don Bletz, chairman of the admissions committee of the Los Angeles Club, 15 percent of whose members are women. Two of Los Angeles' most powerful clubs, the Jonathan Club and the California Club, limit membership to adult males.

At the Commercial Club in San Francisco, Women Organized for Employment have brought intense pressure for the opening of the rolls to women. The club is considered a prime spot for courting clients.

"A poll of the membership is under way on the question of admitting females, W.O.E. claims support from 100 to 150 of the club's 2,000 members and Mel L. Bacharach, executive vice president of the Levi Strauss Company, recently resigned from the club in protest of its exclusion of women. But John W. Bennett, manager of the club, said he believed the idea of admitting women would be rejected.

Women who would want memberships in these clubs have generally reached their positions by climbing up corporate ladders, not onto feminist soapboxes. But that in itself has limited their inroads at the clubs.

At Fitchburg, where the Harvard-Yale-Princeton club last month voted down a proposal to admit women graduates of those universities as members—the Joy Manufacturing Company is known to pay for club memberships of top-level management. "But there are no women at that level," said a spokesman for the company, a proponent of mixing equipment.

Across the country, similar cases are cited. A spokesman for the Exxon Company U.S.A. in Houston, for example, said "Exxon will provide a membership in a private club for its principal officers and department heads." But "women executives with Exxon U.S.A. have not as yet attained that level of leadership."

Once a club rejects and women are permitted to join, they usually are treated with the deference members pay for. "They've made me feel very invited at the Economics Club," said Citibank vice-president Marilyn E. La Marche, who joined the club a year and a half ago.

At those clubs which now boast (or admit) they accept women, "there's been no pounding on the door," said a spokesman for New York's Banker's Club of America, which excised the word "men" from its by-laws three years ago.

"Our members are mostly the chairman of this board or chairman of that board," said a Wall Street Club spokesman. Only five out of the club's 700 members are women. "As women reach higher positions, more of them will become members."

Generally, prospective members must be nominated by a current member, then be approved by a membership board. The cost of conviviality tends to be enough to limit contenders to the higher tax brackets.

At the 13-year-old International Club of Los Angeles, women have been allowed to hold full memberships for the last five years. Richard King, chairman of the club, recalled that "When we discussed dues, many men thought it would be better to give women lower rates. But the women fought it. The initiation fee is $500 and the monthly dues are $35 and some men thought that perhaps the women wouldn't earn high enough salaries to pay the expenses. They were wrong, however, because our women members are among the best-paid people in town."

In any case, it's often the company that pays. And this practice, inadvertently, may be the thing to break open even the most tightly held all-male policies.

Few of the private clubs have been sued for unlawful sex discrimination. One reason may be that a case is difficult to make, especially private clubs are prohibited from allowing in only those they want, according to Barbara Shack, associate director of the New York Civil Liberties Union.

Two clubs that were challenged—New York's Harvard and San Francisco's Press—chose integration instead of litigation. The suits were dropped, leaving no legal precedent.

But the Government may be on the way to taking an effective swipe at the private club concept, through the purse strings of its corporate contractors.

The Treasury Department has questioned whether banks and savings and loan institutions with government accounts may pay dues to clubs excluding women or minorities. It is awaiting a legal opinion from the Justice Department as to whether such support violates an executive order prohibiting federal contractors from discriminating in employment.

When asked what effect an antidiscrimination ruling by the Treasury might have, the manager of a very posh, very restrictive midtown New York club said, "If corporations say to us, 'We're not paying you dues unless you let our women in,' men's clubs would be opening up nationwide."

Of the large corporations that sponsor memberships, many do not question club policies. A Mobil Corporation spokesman, for example, said his company does not screen private clubs on the basis of their admissions policies, although the spokesman hastened to add that "we are reviewing our policy."

Several large banking corporations nationwide which sponsor club dues say that for the time being they are waiting for the Treasury ruling before changing their policies.

Meanwhile, as women reach more and more top management positions, the consensus is that the old boys will have to let "the ladies" come into the network, regardless of legal rulings. For some, the notion of women invading the gentlemen's club remains regrettable if not intolerable.

The Sky Club in New York bars women from membership because "men like to get together in a particular atmosphere," said a spokesman.

At the very exclusive Links Club, women are barred because there is "no space to put a ladies room. Sex has nothing to do with it—it's just the space," a spokesman insisted. Membership has been closed since 1968, he added, because the New York facility, built for 300 members, is being used by about 1,000.

Even Rotary clubs, a sprawling organization that attracts local businessmen from around and outside the country, hews to the all-male line. The rules of the International Rotary Club define it as "an organization of business and professional men." And that means no women, according to a Rotary spokesman in New York.

But Tim Jones, assistant secretary of New York's Century Club, said, "Things are changing and we'll have to change, too."

The Century Club last month began permitting women to dine in the club five nights a week instead of only on a Wednesday night buffet. Asked if women might soon be allowed to join, a spokesman said, "I don't think the majority of members would be in favor of it at this moment, but since we've never asked them, I can't say for sure."

On the other side of the coin, the Women's City Club in Boston has about 500 women members and about 30 male associate members. The men have full use of the facilities—but no voting privileges. A club spokesman said that women would be welcome (as associate members). "We'd get more revenue," she explained. "You know, women don't drink very much."

The man on the left is John Loconsolo, president of Belt Painting Corporation of Brooklyn, one of the largest painting contractors in the New York area. Belt Painting has handled such major jobs as the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge, the Washington Bridge (in conjunction with Dynamic Painting & Decorating Corp.) and the new Bellevue Hospital, and has a maintenance painting contract for the World Trade Center.

The man who's helping Mr. Loconsolo paint a better profit picture is his bank. He's Joe Kuhn of Chemical Bank. The kind of banker who can get things done for you on his own and on-the-spot.

"Joe makes sure we get the highest possible return on our investment"

Mr. Loconsolo said, "Because of the nature of our business, we often have surplus capital around. So Joe makes short-term investments for us in commercial paper and makes sure we get the highest possible return on our investment. I definitely believe he does a terrific job."

"Joe got the payroll problem solved for us"

"I like Chemical's flexibility," Mr. Loconsolo added. "Joe really wants to be helpful. If something special comes up, I can call Joe and he's always available. Once I needed some special help for getting a payroll distributed. Joe got the payroll problem solved for us. I suppose it applies to all his customers, but Joe always seems to get us special services."

Houston asked its executive private clubs so clearly aimed without confrontational lunch crowds. But one woman—phoned the Houston Club and "ultimately" a Club for membership was rebuffed. "They signed to be up on me," she reported.

Jane Scully, president of the Houston Club, said she was "in a bind" because she had to raise $100,000 to pay for the club's new dining room. She had to raise the money in a hurry because the club's membership was dropping.

But the club's membership was dropping because of the club's policy of not allowing women to join. "We've had a lot of women who want to join," she said, "but we can't take them in."

At the Duquesne in Pittsburgh, the club's membership is also dropping because of the club's policy of not allowing women to join. "We've had a lot of women who want to join," she said, "but we can't take them in."

At the Bohemian Club in San Francisco, the club's membership is also dropping because of the club's policy of not allowing women to join. "We've had a lot of women who want to join," she said, "but we can't take them in."

THE WORKHORSE OF INVESTMENTS

Cloud Seeding Hits Bumpy Weather

By CYNTHIA JABS

CORVALLIS, Ore.—Last winter, the snow-covered mountains of eastern Oregon were slightly more snow-covered than usual.

That was on purpose. The Portland General Electric Company had had clouds seeded to increase precipitation. The utility estimated that with increased run-off from the snow, it was able to produce an extra 50 million kilowatt-hours of electricity. Also set off conditions more dangerous.

This summer, residents of the area complained about the wettest season they've had in years. No one has proven a connection between the winter seeding and the summer rain, but the controversy stirred up by the sequence of events helped Portland Electric to decide to drop the seeding program.

"People tend to feel very possessive about their weather . . . acknowledged Keith Brown of North American Weather Consultants, which did the seeding in question. "It becomes an emotional subject. A project that benefits a utility is especially likely to be unpopular while fuel bills are high."

Weather modification, in fact, has turned into a touchy enough subject to have produced citizens protest groups; about 15 major current lawsuits and spark the passage of a bill—signed by President Ford last week—which provides for a year-long study of the practice, with an eye to getting a firmer grip on how it should, and should not, be used.

The principle that makes cloud-seeding work is fairly simple. The tiny water droplets that make up a cloud need a particle of dust or pollen—or a substitute—to collect on so as to become large enough, and heavy enough to fall as rain, or snow, or hail. The technique of dispersing silver iodide, dry ice or some other "seed" into clouds from a plane or ground generator has been around since World War II.

But in recent years, seeding has been used increasingly by utilities—especially in the West and Midwest, where hydro-electric power is important and by farming cooperatives and local governments for irrigation purpose or suppression of crop-damaging hail.

Most of the current lawsuits over weather concern claims that hail suppression (getting it to fall before it becomes big enough to do major damage) has reduced total precipitation and thus contributed to the drought that has hurt farmers nationwide this year.

In Utah, county and state governments hire North American Weather to increase snowfall over nearly half the state to provide more water for irrigation. The project now in its third season, is regulated and funded by the state.

Then there is fog control. The airport at Spokane, Wash., which claims the distinction of being the nation's foggiest, spends a minimum of $4,000 to $5,000 a month on seeding for fog control. It estimates that with very cold fog the chances of successfully opening up the airport are better than 90 percent; warmer fog is harder to handle.

One of the biggest unanswered questions right now is who should take responsibility for regulating and coordinating weather modification efforts. Four different Federal agencies are involved in research—the National Science Foundation, the Bureau of Reclamation in the Interior Department, the United States Air Force, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, a branch of the Commerce Department. But Washington has thus far avoided an active regulatory role.

The Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration requires reports on all weather modification operations—70 were filed last year—but entering reports into the public record is about the extent of the agency's activity in this field.

"We know what's going on and who's doing it and that's about it," said a spokesman for the administration.

Representative George Brown, Democrat of California, who sponsored the just-signed weather bill in the House, explained that "our technological capabilities have outrun our foresight about technological effects. What our legislation requires is that we take a look at these capabilities and begin to find a framework, in which we can use them without hurting each other."

In the meantime, the responsibility is being handled piecemeal at the state level. And only 30 states have any legislation at all to cover the subject.

In Minnesota last year, cloud seeding for irrigation affected 10 million acres of land—that's almost 20 percent of the state's land area. But there are no state laws on the books for restricting or licensing rainmakers.

"We had hoped to get a law out of this year's legislature," said Randall Young of the State Agricultural Department. "But they spent most of their time trying to decide where to put Viking Stadium."

Portland General Electric's cloud-seeding was more thoroughly supervised than most. The State Department of Agriculture looks into the technical competence of a prospective cloud seeder, the equipment and materials he plans to use and the specific aims of the project before issuing a license. It also requires personal liability coverage of up to $300,000 (no claims have ever been paid).

"The problem is that, except for a few educators, the cloud-seeders are the only ones who know what's going on," according to Jay Bowerman, a spokesman for the Sun River Development, a 3,500-acre resort community in eastern Oregon. Mr. Bowerman has charged that roads in the development were more hazardous and need more plowing because of the extra snowfall from seeded clouds.

Portland General Electric estimates that it increased the average snowfall by only 10 percent. But a National Science Foundation study with the Stanford Research Institute noted that most of the increase came during the few storms that are most "seedable." The yield from a very seedable storm can be more than doubled, according to the study.

"And that can cause us some real problems," says Mr. Bowerman. "But there's no way to make a legal claim because you can't prove that any snow damages were the result of cloud-seeding. They can always say it was going to snow anyway."

Raymond Davis, a lawyer who has served as a consultant to a number of states and companies involved in weather control, agreed. "I don't know of a single case where a weather modifier was judged liable for damages," he said.

That could change. The biggest current weather lawsuit concerns the Rapid City, S.D., flood in 1972 which claimed 250 lives—relatives of those killed in the flood have sued the Federal Government, charging the Interior Department with gross negligence in the cloud-seeding research it was conducting in connection with the University of South Dakota in Rapid City. Cloud seeding took place on the day of the flood.

Claims in the case could amount to as much as $300 million, but—again —direct connection between seeding and the flood is unproven.

The underlying principle is that a portion of that falls, hail and all seeding to all what would be

From the cloud-seeding it's just a matter of efficiency of a given set of North American conditions. "We can clear skies,"

If you're parting company with a company:

How to beat the tax-bite on your "lump-sum" payout from a pension- or profit-sharing plan.

It happens to a lot of people...in every type of organization:

For a variety of reasons, they come to the parting of ways before actual retirement age, and are thus entitled to a lump-sum distribution from the organization's pension- or profit-sharing plan.

Before the Pension Reform Act went into effect, if you were receiving this kind of payout—it would have immediately been subject to Federal and State taxes. And the bite would have been substantial!

But now that's all changed. Indeed, the new law has given new meaning to the saying: "parting can be such sweet sorrow."

You can, in fact, shelter your pension- or profit-sharing money from all current taxes if you channel it (within 60 days after receipt of the funds) into an Individual Retirement Account. This advantageous form of transfer is now known under a variety of names...the "Rollover IRA," the "Conduit Account," the "Portable Pension," etc. Whatever the term, it couldn't be a better deal for you, at a very crucial time in your financial life.

At The East New York Savings Bank, your IRA funds earn the highest savings-bank interest rate allowed by law, while both principal and interest continue tax-free until withdrawn at retirement. The bite at that time is likely to be reduced because of a possible lower tax-bracket, and because the Retirement Tax Credits provision may apply.

Of course, these aren't the only reasons for establishing your Rollover IRA at The East New York Savings Bank.

Consider: there are no hidden sales-fees or "loads" ...no annual administration costs...no plan redemption fees...no fixed timetable of contributions. In short, there are none of the added costs that can erode your principal and slow the growth of your IRA!

At The East New York Savings Bank—as recognized experts in this field—we are prepared to give you special advice and service concerning the Rollover IRA. 1) We'll send you a free comprehensive guide to the whole program; 2) We'll be glad to meet personally with you and your accountant, lawyer, etc. There is never a charge for such advisory service.

Let this coupon show you how "parting can be such sweet sorrow."

Man at Playboy

The New York Times/Paul Semora

ulation as indicative of the departure of undesirable readers to more prurient magazines. "Playboy is through playing the numbers game," he says. "It will instead establish its own optimum level of service to its advertisers and readers." He describes the magazine's audience as young and "up-scale."

It is said that the new Playboy president will be paid $250,000 a year, and he doesn't deny it. "The money gets a lot of publicity," he says, "but I didn't join Playboy for money. It just happens to offer the most tremendous opportunity in publishing today."

When Mr. Daniels was first approached about the job, he declined it. "I had a future in Knight-Ridder and I wasn't interested in moving, but I agreed to talk to Hefner," he says. "That meeting did it. I liked him immediately, found him very bright, very self-aware, with no identity crisis. That meeting was the first week in July. After that I did my own personal investigation and discovered that he had a good perspective about his company. I saw myself fitting well into the organization."

Mr. Daniels' former staff members at various newspapers consider him one of the best executives they've ever worked for. "The people Daniels hired and trained are now running major newspapers across the country," says Neal Shine, managing editor of the Detroit Free Press.

Mr. Daniels was born and raised in Washington, D.C. His mother and brother are all doctors. He went to college in North Carolina, a state which has turned out a number of fine journalists.

But Mr. Daniels prefers to consider himself a throwback to earlier forebears who ran a family dynasty in the news business. His grandfather, Josephus Daniels, founded The Raleigh News-Observer in North Carolina at the turn of the century. "My grandfather was politically very adept," says Mr. Daniels. "He was Secretary of the Navy under Woodrow Wilson, was responsible for bringing Roosevelt to Washington, and served as Ambassador to Mexico during the Roosevelt years."

One of Josephus Daniels' sons, Jonathan, succeeded his father as editor of The Raleigh News-Observer, became President Franklin D. Roosevelt's press secretary and a biographer of Harry Truman. When Derick Daniels reached career decisions he chose his uncle's newspaper life.

"I'd heard people's gizzards dissected and discussed to the point where I'd had enough," he says of his doctor-parents. "So it was natural for me to turn to the publishing side. When I was young they wanted me to work for the family company, but I wanted to prove myself. I never worked there. I went off and did it on my own instead."

His first job in 1950 was as a copyreader for another North Carolina newspaper, The Durham Morning Herald, at $25 a week. He worked there for three months, decided he was worth more and left for The St. Petersburg Times in Florida as a reporter. After a year and a half he went to The Atlanta Constitution and, three years later, to The Miami Herald as a reporter and copy editor.

He was made city editor of The Herald in 1961, and then came what he considers his big break. "I was hired as city editor of The Detroit Free Press without ever having seen the City of Detroit. That was to date the most exciting job of my life. In 1967 I became executive editor. The date is forever engraved in my memory—July 23—because it was the day the riots broke out in the city."

Under his guidance the paper won a Pulitzer Prize for its riot coverage, but Mr. Daniels is self-effacing about it. "The staff won it, not I," he says. "They're the ones who deserve the credit."

Other Pulitzer Prizes followed Mr. Daniels' rise in the Knight organization, but he won't take credit for them: "My job was to try to create a climate in which people with spectacular talent could do their best. We were pretty successful with that approach." In 1971 he became news director for Knight Newspapers, before its merger with Ridder and began to take on responsibility for Knight's Washington bureau. He became vice president in charge of all news operations for Knight in 1973 and, under that umbrella, founded Knight News Services Inc., a commercial wire service, of which he was the president.

In 1974 Knight merged with Ridder to become Knight-Ridder Newspapers Inc., and he was appointed a member of the nine-man committee which took over operating responsibility for 32 newspapers nationwide.

During this period Mr. Daniels parted from his first wife, Elizabeth Blalock, and discovered Miss Taylor, who is called "M. J." and who pretends to retain her maiden name. She is a tall, slim, blonde. "I was an only child," she says, "born on Long Island and raised in Florida. My mother, whom I traveled with, treated me as an adult. I became used to a wide variety of social situations. Nothing phases me." She foresees no conflicts in being married to the president to Playboy Enterprises. "I look forward to an active life, and it doesn't bother me a bit that Derick will be around gorgeous women," she says. The Danielses are now settling into their new 34th-floor penthouse apartment on Chicago's fashionable Near North Side.

Mr. Daniels says he will still be spending a lot of time in airports commuting between Chicago and California. He also will continue to serve as a director of The News Observer Publishing Company in North Carolina, which owns The Raleigh Times and several smaller newspapers, a printing company and a trucking service.

He says he's happy to be living in the Windy City: "I'm going to walk to work. I've done my duty to the suburbs, back lawns, home repairs. I'm now going to live a very urban way of life. Some jobs you go into as president and you spend the first 60 days deciding what country club you're going to belong to. Playboy is a long way from being that sort of job. I'm going to immerse myself in my work. I've given no thought to the quasi-social aspects of the life style. I'm a winner. I'm not used to losing. I never did and I'm not about to start."

USAN BRITTON

In his second day on the job, Hugh Hefner, the new president of Playboy Enterprises, Inc., did something that other men in his position don't do: he got married. He wed a woman who is chief of news operations for Knight-Ridder Newspapers, a certain aura surrounds her. She is a woman of beautiful women, a woman who has been carefully cultivated for two years. Mr. Daniels says his role as president of the magazine will be all business.

He is living the sort of life that is associated with Playboy," says Susan Britton, a 47-year-old Southern belle who has been prominent in the magazine's business since 1973. "I've received letters from friends, friends in his southern drawl, friends who take some facelifts, friends who are going off to college, friends who are well, friends who are going to college, friends who are well, friends who are going to college, friends who are well."

Mr. Daniels decline to discuss his role as president of Playboy Enterprises. Mr. Daniels had assembled a five-man committee to handle day-to-day operations. The committee is made up of associates and counsel. Mr. Daniels As for his relationship with Hefner, he adds: "He and I are together. This is long-term. He wants someone to be fully responsible for the day-to-day of that means it and I'll do it."

have sunk from a high of 25 1/2 in 1972, to a recent price around 4, up from the low of 2 1/2 touched last year, on the New York Stock Exchange.

Yes, Mr. Daniels is optimistic. He says he's going to initiate a process by which every one of Playboy's divisions is closely examined. "Even now," he says, "Playboy Clubs International has been producing some very healthy profits, and it's in the early stages of a strong comeback."

Mr. Daniels declined to discuss the details of how he's going to accomplish some of the rapid changes Playboy needs because, he says, "I'm the new boy on the block. I don't come in with any magic answers. I will work with lots of other talent."

ed people to figure out the best direction." He says Playboy magazine will continue to try to be a cutting edge of social change. He calls his recent interview with Jimmy Carter, which made front-page news around the world, "excellent feature journalism." This was the interview in which the Democratic nominee said: "I've looked on a lot of women with lust. I've committed adultery in my heart many times."

"We will have more interviews like this," says Mr. Daniels, adding: "Playboy is not going to engage in public warfare. It's going to be a high-class route. It's had a fantastic past, a whole field to itself, and now it has to compete with itself plus belated imitators. But it's not going to follow them into the gutter."

"It will be broadly designed in its life style and it will recognize sexuality as part of the total human fabric, which the world had denied them for many years until Hugh Hefner taught his readers that it was healthy to be a human sexual creature. But Playboy will not cater to sensationalism."

The Interest in 'Sinkers'

By JOHN H. ALLAN

In the 18th Century, the Elmira Transport Railroad sold some 5 bonds that it promised to pay 10 years.

Today, investors aren't as patient as they were then. They want more assurance that they'll get their money back. Corporations don't have to stand up to the same scrutiny as they have to. The annual interest rates have produced the fund bond.

Fund bonds aren't new by any means, but they aren't well understood by the investing public either. The funds shorten the average term of a sinking fund, and because the funds are committed to redeeming a certain number of bonds each year, they provide more price stability than non-fund bonds. The latter aspect becomes more important at a time when interest rates—and thus bond prices—are in a state of flux. And many investors, at least, think that such a direction is due soon.

Operation of a sinking fund can be best understood through a comparison of an actual recent bond issue. The Enserch Corporation, sold to be known as the Lone Star Company, sold $50 million of bonds carrying an interest rate of 8.75 percent and priced at par, or 100 percent of their face value—$1,000 for the minimum block.

The bonds are scheduled to mature on Oct. 1, 2001. But, beginning Oct. 1, 1981, the company will acquire $1,875,000 of the bonds each year so that three-quarters of the issue will be retired before the final maturity. Those purchases represent the sinking fund, and with them, the average life of the bond issue will be 17.1 years, not the 25 years the 2001 final maturity date might suggest.

For Enserch, that means paying less interest. For investors, it means the possibility of holding a five-year (or six or seven-year) bond rather than a 25-year one. A sinking fund, as its name implies, aims to sink the debt. It is operated by the trustee of the bond issue. The corporation periodically pays the trustee cash, and the trustee then earlier calls in some of the bonds by lot or goes into the market to buy the bonds. Open market purchases are generally used if the market price is below par.

According to David M. Darst, author of "The Complete Bond Book," a sinking fund can be valuable to the bondholder in two ways. First, it reduces the investor's risk to a degree by reducing the debt of the corporation that sold the issue. And second, the purchases to satisfy sinking fund requirements tend to support the market price for the bonds.

Balanced against these benefits, wrote Mr. Darst, now the head of the Zurich, Switzerland, office of Goldman, Sachs & Company, is the possibility that sinking fund bonds selling above par may be called—taken away from an investor's portfolio just when he would like to hold on to them.

According to Leonard Wissner of Thomson & McKinnon Auchincloss Kohlmeier, about one-quarter of all non-convertible corporate bonds have sinking funds. About 80 percent of bonds from industrial corporations and one-third of finance company bonds have "sinking" and about one-sixth of all utility bonds carry them, he added.

Sometimes, sinking fund bonds are sold with an option for the company to double the amount it may call for redemption for the fund.

Bond issues normally give investors some assurance that the securities will be outstanding for several years, even if interest rates should decline markedly. Most may not be retired at all for five or 10 years, after which the entire amount may be redeemed—but usually at a premium price. Bonds called for sinking fund payments, however, are paid no such premium.

The strategy that an investor employs in buying sinking fund bonds should depend on his views on the future course of interest rates, Mr. Wissner stated.

Milton Friedman—Nobel Laureate

The Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Science was awarded last Thursday to Milton Friedman of the University of Chicago. The Swedish Academy of Sciences bestowed the honor on the 64-year-old professor of economics "for his achievements in the fields of consumption analysis, monetary history and theory, and for his demonstration of the complexity of stabilization policy."

The following excerpts are taken from the book, "The Economists," recently published by Basic Books.

By LEONARD SILK

Adam Smith is generally hailed as the father of modern economics, and Milton Friedman as his most distinguished spiritual son.

Building on deist theology, according to which God, after setting the universe in motion, abandoned it and assumed no control over natural forces, Smith set out to demonstrate that an economy functions best when it operates on the basis of the forces of self-interest and competition. The injunction of Smith to the state was let it happen—laissez faire—let self-seeking businessmen and individuals pursue their own interests without interference from government.

The remarkable contribution of Milton Friedman, in the wake of the Great Depression of the 1930's that had threatened the very existence of the free-enterprise system, was to show how much life was left in the old-time Smithian creed—and how many ingenious applications could be devised to harness self-interest and the forces of the marketplace to the solution of social problems.

Friedman became an ardent crusader for capitalism and economic freedom at a time when most of his leading contemporaries in economics were seeking ways to use government to improve the performance of the economy and to advance social welfare. But he was not simply Adam Smith redivivus. Smith, wary of business interests and their tendency to form monopolies against the consuming public, wrote at a time when the industrial class was seeking to rise against the resistance of the dominant feudal authority; Friedman came as the defender of a business class already in the saddle.

Friedman's own origins were lowly. He was born in Brooklyn, New York, in 1912, the son of poor Jewish immigrants. His father died when Milton was fifteen years old, leaving his mother with very little money to pay for their son's education. Milton had received a religious upbringing, but by the time he was thirteen, he had decided that religion was nonsense, and never had anything further to do with it.

His greatest aptitude was for mathematics. He was a hardworking student who was not only brighter but also younger than most of his classmates. He graduated from Rahway High School before his 16th birthday and won a New Jersey state scholarship to attend nearby Rutgers University in New Brunswick. He received his B.S. in two years in the Reserve Officers Training Corps, which, he says, gave him a lifelong dislike of compulsory military training.

Two young men, Arthur F. Burns and Homer Jones, were responsible for introducing Friedman to economics. Both were teaching at Rutgers while completing their doctoral work at other institutions—Burns at Columbia University and the National Bureau of Economic Research, and Jones at the University of Chicago. Chicago was a center of work in economic theory and the home of a very conservative economic ideology. But Columbia—more particularly, the National Bureau of Economic Research, under the dominance of Wesley C. Mitchell, its principal founder, president, and research director—stressed a would-be scientific empiricism, a search for "the facts" rather than abstract theories of economic behavior.

Friedman later sought to show that the difference between a search for facts and a search for theories was more apparent than real.

Mitchell's protégé Arthur Burns was essentially an empiricist. Burns's nearly completed doctorate dissertation on production trends in the United States, which he was writing under Mitchell, served as the basis of a seminar he gave at Rutgers in Friedman's senior year. From that seminar Friedman gained an appreciation of the role of "value-free" statistical research.

Meanwhile, Homer Jones was filling his star pupil's head with dreams of Chicago, and encouraged and supported Friedman's application for a graduate scholarship there. Chicago was an exciting place for a budding economist in the 1930's. Frank Knight was the philosophical heavyweight among the conservatives in its economics department. He held that the state, even when it sought to do good, was far more likely to do evil.

But Chicago was much more than the home or museum of a Smithian ideology. Knight himself was a gifted theorist; his book, "Risk, Uncertainty and Profit" (1921) had laid the foundations of the modern theory of the firm. Aaron Director (Paul Samuelson's first economics teacher) was a mordant critic of governmental and social institutions. Jacob Viner was one of the greatest theorists and historians of economic thought who ever lived.

Ideologically, Chicago's economics department was by no means all of one piece. Henry Simons, a brilliant and original monetary theorist, was a determined foe of big business and monopoly; and where the market could not work, he was willing to see government socialize. One of the great stars of the Chicago department was Paul Douglas, who had grown up on a Maine farm and who joined his 20th century liberalism and political reform to a remarkable gift for economic theory. Douglas was later to become an influential Democratic senator from Illinois.

For Friedman, what Chicago stood for was "theory with empirical content." The quest for valid theory was what economics was all about. Although Knight was the major philosophical influence on Friedman, the young scholar did not immediately become a true believer. He does not remember Knight as having been a good teacher, Knight's acute critical facilities, combined with his growing sense of the limitations of economic analysis, tended to stifle those who looked to him for guidance and support. His favorite sayings were "All simple statements are wrong" and "No statement is so absurd that it doesn't contain some truth."

Friedman appears to have absorbed both these Knightian dicta into his own being. He delights in making short, dramatic pronouncements which he quickly acknowledges as partially wrong while insisting on their basic truth. This style and strategy make him a formidable and ingenious debater, and a tough opponent to catch.

This sometimes infuriates his opponents. Joan Robinson, after a frustrating encounter at Chicago, called Friedman a "paper tiger." Paul Samuelson says, "Now I don't think Milton is a charlatan. . . . He believes what he says at any time he says it. But he also has a very healthy respect for his audience. If you are a yokel, he gives you a hokum answer. If he is giving his presidential address, he states it more guardedly, and more carefully. . . . It is simply a matter of the style of the person."

In 1938, Friedman married Rose Director, the sister of Aaron Director and an economist in her own right. He described his broadest philosophical book, "Capitalism and Freedom," as written with the assistance of Rose D. Friedman. Professor Friedman appears to owe a measure of his libertarian zeal to his wife.

At the National Bureau of Economic Research during the academic year 1939-1940, he met Harold Groves, an economics professor at the University of Wisconsin, a distinguished student of public finance, and a liberal hero to a generation of younger public-finance economists, including his students Walter W. Heller, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, and Joseph A. Pechman, director of economic studies at the Brookings Institution.

Harold Groves was impressed with Friedman and was instrumental in arranging for him to go to the University of Wisconsin as a visiting professor for the 1940-1941 academic year. The Wisconsin tradition was also "liberal" in the 20th century sense, favoring social reform, government intervention, and a moderately populist or socialist program.

The image which Friedman's arrival at Wisconsin suggests is that of a libertarian Daniel walking into the institutional lion den—a historic confrontation between the "Chicago" and "Madison" doctrines. In fact, there was no such confrontation. Although Friedman's ideological sympathies lay with the free market, he had not yet actively taken up the cudgels in its behalf. From a professional standpoint, he believed in a "value-free" economics; he was politically inert. Nevertheless, Friedman did become embroiled in controversy at Wisconsin.

One issue exercising the Wisconsin economics department in 1941 was whether it should merge with the business school. The department was split into camps, with the conservatives favoring the merger and the liberals opposing it. In the midst of the dispute, Friedman received and accepted the offer of a longer-term appointment; that offer then became an additional bone of contention between the two sides. Ironically, those who opposed Friedman's appointment—the forces led by Prof. Walter Morton, who favored the proposed merger—were the political conservatives with whom Friedman was ideologically most in sympathy. The liberal institutionalists, the proponents of a strong and independent economics department, wholeheartedly supported Friedman. Walter W. Heller, a liberal graduate student, championed Friedman's cause and organized picket lines in his behalf.

An ugly note of anti-Semitism crept into the controversy. Selig Perlman, a distinguished labor historian, was the only Jew on the Wisconsin faculty, and some members of the department felt that one was enough. Further, Friedman was from "New York," "from the East," "from Chicago," and was thus regarded as a kind of interloper. Prof. Edwin E. Witte, the department chairman, was indecisive. Friedman later said that Witte demonstrated "the courage of a fish." In the end, Friedman withdrew his acceptance and returned to New York.

After the war, Friedman spent a year as associate professor of economics at the University of Minnesota, then joined the faculty at Chicago, where he has remained.

Upon his return to Chicago, Friedman came out as an unabashed crusader for the free market. Together with George Stigler, he had written "Roofs or Ceilings? The Current Housing Problem," a tract against postwar rent control. In it, Friedman and Stigler argued cogently that the free market would provide the best solution to the acute housing shortage left in the wake of World War II.

"Roofs or Ceilings?" was brought out under the auspices of Leonard Read's conservative Foundation for Economic Education. Friedman and Stigler soon became aware of the hazards of association with free-market ideologists outside the economics profession. Other economists attacked them for linking their names to what was considered a blatantly propagandistic organization.

The outcry raised for Friedman the difficult issue of how to resolve the competing impulses toward public advocacy and toward the kind of scientific objectivity and scholarly consensus so fervently espoused by Wesley Mitchell. It also raised the deeper issue of value conflicts among economists: Were ethical values extraneous to or inherent in economic analysis itself?

Distressed with his profession and with what he regarded as confusion over the nature of economics as a science, Friedman wrote the Methodology of Positive Economics, an essay which became the first in a daringly titled "Essays in Economics."

As positive economics Friedman suggested, none of these (that is, differences in policy) would tend to at least narrow. For positive economics would yield policy conclusions, and deserve to be, as Friedman's strong in that economists who did them were guilty not only of values or political also of an unscientific method of "positive economic

THE ECONOMIC SCENE

Optimism in the Orient

THOMAS E. MULLANEY

It is difficult to find many pessimists in the financial and business communities in Hong Kong, which is both an economic activity in the industrialized world and the main door for China's commercial west.

Optimistic reports on the stock market's week, related to uncertain political conditions in various parts of the world, failed to dampen the domestic outlook and interest conditions.

Optimism abounds over the colony's trade strength, the employment situation and the transit system now being built. It has been a flare-up in inflation, but just as hard as everywhere else in the world since the recession and recovery has taken place.

Hong Kong's economy, of course, is a local event. Since the colony is an international financial center, the strength that it has here confirms the improving tone of the world's economies. Nevertheless, the stock market here earlier this week attracted considerable attention, even though off the market's sizable decline is important.

It was caused principally by curative attitudes in London, where nervousness is not only over the state of the world but also over the recent political developments in the People's Republic of China after the takeover of Peking.

Hua Kuo-feng to the chairmanship of the Far East Stock Exchange, he said, "he was perplexed by the market's fall."

Comment of the new ruler in China should be good news for our market," he said, "he is serving in Mao's position for the first time, and we know he follows the same line."

Important in this bustling city of 4 million is the movement of the Hong Kong foreign-exchange market. There the community has caused for considerable concern. The currency held its ground all week. Instead of slipping below the Hong Kong dollar to the American dollar, the Hong Kong dollar to the American dollar remained steady at around 1.01479.

A foreign exchange dealer with the Western Bank noted the Hong Kong dollar in the face of political external influences and predicted that it would be stronger with the advance of the year if nothing happens in Shanghai.

It survives economically on the sustenance of its exports, since about 80 percent of its exports are for markets abroad. Production here is for markets abroad.

Production here is for markets abroad. Production here is for markets abroad. Production here is for markets abroad.

was faring "very well" this year because of the export boom, the rise in tourism, and capacity operation in industries such as clothing, textiles, electronics—which has brought about a virtually full level of employment. He said the colony's overall export volume was running about 30 percent ahead of last year, but shipments to the United States, the colony's major market, were faring even better. In the first seven months of this year, the volume to the United States was up about 71 percent.

The improving tone of the Hong Kong economy was also underscored this past week by the Governor, Sir Murray MacLehose, in an address at the opening of the new session of the legislative council. He also outlined plans to implement some sweeping social changes for the large number of low-income members of society.

Included in the plan are things such as a big expansion in housing and education projects, as well as more holiday time for workers and an extension of welfare assistance to many who have been previously excluded from such assistance. The Governor predicted that the year would show a gain of around 25 percent in exports and an increase of 16 percent in the gross domestic product in real terms.

Leading businessmen here share the optimistic views of the colony's Governor. In interviews this last week, several of them stressed the same things—the resurgence of exports, the world recovery, the ample liquidity of the banking system and the flexibility of Hong Kong's economy to adjust to changing conditions.

One local businessman cited the recent influx of some Arab oil money as another indicator of the underlying strength of the economy here. "Not much Arab money has come in here yet," he said, "because they are very conservative in their investments. But Adnan Khashoggi flew in the other day looking for some opportunities." Even the shipping industry, one of the colony's depressed businesses, has shown some signs of springing to life—in the tanker end, but not in the dry cargo sector.

At the end of last year, it had been estimated that some 50 million deadweight ship tonnage had been laid up around the world because of the international economic situation. Now the total is down to around 40 million, according to Y.K. Pao, chairman of the World Wide Shipping Group, one of the major independent ship owners in the world, with 140 vessels.

"Next year should be better," he said, "but how much better it will be depends on the size of the next oil-price increase by the OPEC countries. I hope the increase is very, very nominal. Even 10 percent would be too much for the world economies. Maybe we could afford 5 percent." There have been reports that the oil-producing nations have been thinking in terms of a 10-to-15 percent rise in petroleum prices starting in January.

The same fear over the upcoming oil-price decision was expressed by J. H. Bremridge, chairman of Sware Pacific Ltd., a local conglomerate with annual sales of $200 million (U.S.) in industries ranging from real estate to commodities and transportation. "The whole economic picture is very exciting, but we have to be worried about OPEC," he said in another reference to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

All businessmen, however, are wary of the cost picture. Inflation subsided very satisfactorily last year, permitting the colony to improve its economic performance and gain an edge on some of its chief competitors in Southeast Asia. Wages are now rising by about 10 percent a year and John S. Wong, a director of Hong Kong Spinners Ltd., said that textile prices "will inevitably go up because nothing tells us raw cotton prices will go down."

One source estimated the inflation rate is up to 5 percent now, a cause for concern. Here, as everywhere, inflation is the danger, that casts a pall over any economic assessment.

MARKETS IN REVIEW

Stocks Sag, Bonds Gain

Market absorbed another beating last week as the widely-watched Dow Jones industrial average fell 15.38 points and closed at 937.00. The decline was attributed to the weakness in the market over the slowing economic recovery and accelerating inflation. Since reaching a peak of 1,014.79 on Sept. 21, the average has fallen 17.79 points.

The New York Stock Exchange had a record high of 89.34 million shares, compared with 87.5 million in the preceding week. The market's strongest performance on Wednesday, when it rallied to the Dow up 15.95 points, occurred when stocks rebounded from a low point and the market returns to a balance between buying and selling. A major change in the news backdrop, however, to Wednesday's advance was the announcement of a new contract between the striking United Auto Workers Union and the Ford Motor Company to end the four-week production stoppage at the nation's second-largest automobile company.

One of the bigger losers during the week was Teledyne, which tumbled 9 points to 85 1/2 for the week. Teledyne's stock was affected by the news Monday that a suit had been filed in Federal Court in Los Angeles charging the diversified manufacturer with fraud and deception in a tender offer it made last February.

In the credit markets, bond prices continued to advance. On Thursday, key interest rates on short-term Government and Federal agencies fell to their lowest levels in more than four years, while rates on tax-exempt bonds moved down to their lowest levels since mid-1974.

Crude oil stocks in the week ended Oct. 8 rose to 286.78 million barrels, from 282.9 million barrels the week before. Gasoline stocks eased from 225.97 million barrels to 225.47 million barrels in the latest week.

EXCEPTIONAL OPPORTUNITIES AWAIT A FEW EXCEPTIONAL PEOPLE TO JOIN AN EXCEPTIONAL COMPANY.

AT AMDAHL:

BUILDER OF THE WORLD'S MOST ADVANCED COMPUTER.

Six years ago, a small group of leading designers of large computers—under the direction of a preeminent, pioneering computer scientist—set out to design and build the world's highest performing computer.

Today, the Amdahl 470V/6 system is just that: a top-of-the-line, 3.8 to 5.2 million dollar computer that out-performs all general purpose computers. It's unprecedented, and so is the company.

Within the past 18 months, this exceptional company has delivered 21 of these systems. Over $88,000,000 worth. But more to the point: 8 of the 21 were shipped within the past 90 days. Which is why we need help...from exceptional, enthusiastic individuals who need to perform well because the task is worth it, and because it's fun. We made a commitment to that philosophy when we began, and we're sticking to it. We have intentionally created a friendly environment where personal efforts are recognized, and we are keeping it that way, despite our rapid growth.

Below are some of our more immediate needs. K.B. Daly would like to hear from you at Amdahl Corporation, 1250 East Arques Avenue, Sunnyvale, California 94086. We are, of course, an equal opportunity employer m/f.

Flu Shots Risk-Taking

Little doubt that when a person with a heart condition goes to a clinic and receives a flu shot, she is under some degree of mental stress...

medically agreed that moderate physical and mental stress induces heart attacks even in those predisposed to them.

This much is known about last week's events. Of approximately one million elderly persons inoculated throughout the country since Oct. 1, at least 14 died within 48 hours.

State and Federal experts immediately investigated and declared without qualification that the vaccine itself is entirely safe; that it has been administered properly, and that the deaths were unconnected in any way with the flu program.

Nine states and localities in others suspended the program at the first reports of deaths; most have resumed inoculations. But there is a question of how readily the elderly and others will now participate.

Even if there is no credible challenge to the experts' verdict, there remains the question of particular danger to particular persons. Medical authorities in Pittsburgh seemed to be addressing that question when Pittsburgh resumed the program.

Estimating relative risks is not easy. Even if the stress of the flu shot does raise the risk of heart attack, the risk of omitting the shot is unknown.

The other strain of flu, known as A-Victoria, is known to exist, and may have killed about 10,000 people in the United States last winter—chiefly the ill and elderly.

Hua Wins Most Of Mao's Power

Mao Tse-tung's extraordinary power, which became the object of a struggle among other Chinese leaders even before his death, has now been conferred—at least in part and at least temporarily—on Hua Kuo-feng, who had been Prime Minister.

Though information about China's leadership is still unclear and elliptical, Mr. Hua seems to have the support of key military leaders.

The emphasis on economic growth is also likely to affect external policy; Chinese officials hinted ambiguously to a Swedish delegation last week that foreign-trade might now increase.

Unofficial but seemingly reliable reports from Peking said that the principal leaders of the "radical" faction, including Mao's widow, Chiang Ching, were under arrest.

The famous wall posters that gave the first hints of Mr. Hua's new eminence are now directly attacking the radical faction, even in Shanghai, their principal power base.

On the Nature of Presidential Leadership

The Rivals For Office Would Use It Differently

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

AMERICUS, Ga.—The Ship of State "has turned around and we are headed upstream." President Ford remarked of his two-year stewardship as he rode downstream not long ago on the Mississippi River.

The rhetoric may have been banal, but the Republican and Democratic candidates for President managed in their shipboard smiles to outline a fundamental distinction that goes to the heart of their Nov. 2 contest.

Style. Mr. Ford is uniformly said by his aides to be decent and deferential; Mr. Carter is more often called tough and demanding.

The former Governor prefers to deal in crisp conversation, well-ordered and concise memorandums.

Record. Mr. Ford's Grand Rapids, Mich., conservatism, nurtured by years of membership and leadership in a Congressional minority, has created a record of remarkable continuity and continuing unremarkability.

Just as he had fought Great Society initiatives of the Johnson Administration while in Congress, Mr. Ford vetoed more than five dozen Congressional initiatives while in the White House.

Mr. Carter has been far less predictable and more aggressive in a brief and spectacular public career.

Though he tends to exaggerate its impact, Mr. Carter did totally revamp the Georgia government, consolidating agencies and simplifying lines of authority.

Promise. Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter have quite distinct views on technocracy. Mr. Ford offers the promise of more of the same: a steady, unexceptional effort to curtail Federal spending, combat unemployment by working to reduce inflation, and pursue the diplomatic and domestic policies inherited from former President Nixon.

Governor Carter proposes a more vital form of White House leadership, one in which the first 100 days would be full of initiatives to carry out pledges of tax adjustment, budget reform and, above all, reorganization of the Executive Branch to attain what he calls "competent and compassionate" government.

The single difference, eliminating the others, may be the way each conceives of the obligation to use White House authority in behalf of the poor and powerless.

Mr. Carter seldom fails to suggest an activist, interventionist world in campaign talks with Indians, Chicanos, blacks or white ethnic Americans; He tends to ascribe to himself the economic philosophy of Franklin D. Roosevelt, the accountability of Harry S. Truman, the inspirational capacity of John F. Kennedy and the social conscience of Lyndon B. Johnson.

James M. Naughton is a White House correspondent for The New York Times.

Some Voters Believe No President Can Really Lead

By JOSEPH LELYVELD

WASHINGTON—In a Baltimore suburb, a civil engineer named Adam Moore was saying that imaginative and even drastic initiatives were needed to deal with the problem of unemployment; no problem was more pressing, he said, it was Jimmy Carter and not President Ford, Mr. Moore recognized, who was promising energetic measures to roll back unemployment.

That was just before Labor Day. The answer of this one voter seemed an interesting rationalization for an instinctive choice between two men but clearly, an idiosyncratic view.

In a St. Louis suburb, the captain of a Mississippi riverboat, Alan Swahlstedt, sat at his dinette table on a Sunday afternoon, angrily complaining about taxes and welfare.

In Bremerton, Wash., the same argument was heard in a blue-collar neighborhood; only this time it was used to rationalize a vote for Mr. Carter.

Although these are examples from across the nation, they can be offered only as examples, as evidence of a hunch. But after 280 interviews with voters in the past six weeks, it seems safe to say that the notion of an impotent "figurehead" President is widely enough spread to merit closer attention.

Joseph Lelyveld, a reporter for The New York Times, is conducting interviews with voters across the country.

In Summary

Military Part of Syria Winning Lebanon's War

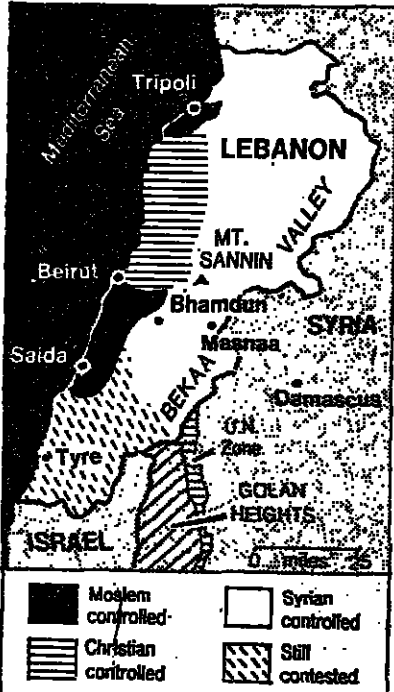

Syria's attempt to crush Palestinian resistance to the Syrian plan for ending the 18-month civil war in Lebanon has produced savage new fighting between the erstwhile allies.

Syrian tanks and infantry, supported by heavy artillery, attacked on two fronts. In southern Lebanon they advanced to within a few miles of Saïda which is Moslem-controlled West Beirut's last supply gate. But in the mountains east of Beirut they encountered fierce resistance from the guerrillas and were able to take only the resort town of Bhamdun.

The Palestinian forces are now confined to a small area near Beirut and the port cities of Saïda and Tripoli. There were indications that the latest Syrian offensive aims to restrict that sphere even further, eventually forcing the Palestinians back into their refugee camps.

Syrian control has widened greatly since Damascus sent its first troops across the border at Maasna last June. The Syrians now control more than half of the country, including most of the Bekaa Valley, Lebanon's main agricultural area.

However, as Syria's military strength in Lebanon has grown, its political difficulties with other Arabs have also increased. The latest offensive has forced cancellation of an Arab leadership conference on Lebanon due to have started this week in Cairo. A substitute conference began yesterday in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, but the hostility between Syria on one side and the Palestinians and Egyptians on the other makes it unlikely that the discussions will deter Syria from pushing ahead with its plans in Lebanon.

Castro Again Accuses C.I.A.

Prime Minister Fidel Castro of Cuba has charged that the Central Intelligence Agency is still plotting his assassination, and said he has a double agent—a spy working for him as well as the intelligence agency—to prove it.

He added that "the Government of President Gerald Ford will not dare to deny this." Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger immediately did, however.

According to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, the Central Intelligence Agency did plot at least eight attempts on Mr. Castro's life in the 1960's.

Mr. Castro also charged the agency with complicity in the sabotaging of a Cuban airliner that crashed Oct. 6 near Barbados, killing 73 persons. He said Cuban exiles based in the United States had planted a bomb aboard, and that because Washington could not or would not control the anti-Castro Cubans he would revoke a 1973 anti-jacking agreement with the United States.

Venezuela and Trinidad-Tobago have arrested a dozen persons, including some Cubans, in connection with the plane crash. The United States has sought the extradition of one of them, Orlando Bosch, for bombings in the Miami area. Washington, D.C., authorities would also like to question him in connection with the bombing that killed the Chilean exile, Orlando Letelier, there on Sept. 21.

At the time it was signed in 1973, the anti-jacking pact was regarded as a major step toward reconciliation between Washington and Havana. United States anger over the Cuban role in Angola's civil war and Mr. Castro's actions last week have reversed that trend.

France Adjusts Nuclear Attitude

France has announced changes in its attitude on the export of nuclear equipment which, it says, will help prevent the spread of atomic weapons. But at the same time, the French intend to go ahead with sales of nuclear plants to South Africa and Pakistan without specifying how the new policy will apply to the sales which have been sharply criticized abroad.

The economic incentive is too great to ignore: France will get $2.4 billion for two reactors to be sold to Iran and although the deals with South Africa and Pakistan are smaller, they still involve hundreds of millions of dollars. Perhaps 80,000 workers, in a country worried about rising unemployment, depend on the nuclear industry and its ancillaries for their livelihoods.

The deal with Pakistan for a plant to reprocess spent nuclear fuel apparently set off the policy review that led to last week's announcement. Because the reprocessing plant could be used to produce plutonium, the material used in atomic bombs, the sale provoked criticism in the United States and elsewhere.

The United States anxiety was caused by the experience with India which used materials supplied by the United States and Canada to set off a nuclear explosion. Washington since has imposed a moratorium on foreign sales of "sensitive" nuclear material.

Faced with Washington's criticism, President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing created a High Council for Foreign Nuclear Policy, with himself as chairman, to clarify France's position on nuclear exports.

In setting the new policy, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing had to consider two domestic political forces. The Gaullist movement on which his regime is based still strongly favors French independence in all things nuclear, the attitude fostered by the late President de Gaulle. But Mr. Giscard d'Estaing also faces a strong challenge from the left and he cannot unduly antagonize centrist parts of the electorate, which, like the left, oppose the spread of nuclear weapons, especially to such nations as South Africa.

Last week's statement said France was willing to discuss nuclear sales in advance with other producers as well as with buyers. France also is ready to consider establishing multinational power-generating centers, as has been proposed by the United States. And, the French insist that in the case of South Africa they will impose safeguards, unspecified but sufficiently strong to prevent the South Africans from using the plant for weapons purposes.

Rugby and Race In South Africa

Rugby football, a bruising sport that is a national passion in South Africa, is again embroiled in the country's racial and political troubles. Some weeks ago, South African authorities indicated they would relax previous barriers to racially mixed sports events, but when white rugby players joined black players for a club match last weekend, the officials threatened the participants with prosecution. Authorities said they are investigating the incident with a view to laying charges.

The Government's policy is that white teams can play black teams at all levels down to club competitions, but that mixed black and white teams are allowed only at the international level. The participation of the white players in a club game last weekend was a deliberate test of that policy.

The previous "concessions" were proclaimed as a sign of a new era in race relations, but the Government's stern reaction to the challenge would seem to indicate that there are, for now at least, clear limits on how far these concessions can be extended.

Rugby figures prominently in the lives of most South African males. The national team, the Springboks, is usually regarded, along with New Zealand's All Blacks, as the best in the world.

It was the rivalry with New Zealand that caused the walkout of most black African nations from last summer's Olympic Games. New Zealand this year ended a boycott of games with South Africa imposed because the South Africans would not permit New Zealand's team to include native Maoris. The New Zealand team this year included Maoris, but the Africans argued that New Zealand should not have sent a team to South Africa until all racial barriers had been removed.

The Rhodesia Conference

A lack of unity among Rhodesia's black nationalist leaders continues to cloud the prospects for next week's conference in Geneva on how to achieve a transition to black majority rule in the former British colony.

Prime Minister Ian D. Smith, whose white regime has reluctantly accepted the need for a change, has asserted that their internal divisions have alienated the nationalists from other black Rhodesians and he would like to see them replaced at Geneva by other blacks, presumably those more amenable to the white regime's position.

But the British, who are sponsoring the Geneva talks, have so far ignored Mr. Smith's suggestion. They have invited the leaders of three major nationalist groups to the meeting. Two of the groups have formed a "patriotic front" but they are still at odds with the third.

Rhodesia's Whites: The Good Life Is In Jeopardy

By HENRY KAMM

SALISBURY, Rhodesia—For the whites in Rhodesia, the stake in the conflict over how much longer they will exercise full rule over the country's blacks is, in its simplest terms, how much, if anything, they can salvage from a way of life that they know has no match for comfort anywhere in the world. The stake will be on the table next week in Geneva, when a conference on the transition to black rule is due to open.

Rhodesia whites resent an image familiar to readers of magazines and viewers of television abroad, an image of ice tinkling in glasses at sun-downer time at the edge of the swimming pool, of groins leading the polo ponies and of lawn bowling in gleaming white juxtaposed against teeming African townships and children behind barbed wire in the so-called protected villages.

What they resent is not the validity of the pictures, which reflect a reality, but an implication that they perceive that white Rhodesians play without working and blacks only suffer. The fact is that white Rhodesians work hard, as evidenced by the astonishing development of thriving industry since sanctions were imposed 11 years ago and the striking productivity of the well-managed white farms, even though much of that productivity stems from black labor. It is also true that the material lot of the Rhodesian black compares generally favorably with that of African-ruled Africans.

The whites' advantage, and unequalled comfort in this beautiful country of glorious sunshine and wide open spaces, comes in the disproportionate reward for their work. The disproportion is not only in a lopsided wage differential between Rhodesian blacks and whites but in the standard of life taken for granted by Rhodesian whites and of people of similar station anywhere else.

With the white minority assigned as much of the country's territory in which to live as the majority, whites live spacious, mainly in individual houses, with a lot of garden separating them from their neighbors. Car ownership is so high that Salisbury's public buses seem segregated because only blacks appear to use them. Skilled labor is the lowest job category held by white adults, and even they have, for the most part, domestic servants. Two per family seems par for the course. Fourteen percent of the total black labor force is in domestic employment, a huge proportion. They earn in their great majority between 10 and 20 Rhodesian dollars ($16.40 to $32.80 U.S.) a month, plus food and fringe benefits.

The Wage Gap

This is low pay, even for Rhodesian blacks, whose average annual earnings last year were 461 Rhodesian dollars ($758 U.S.) while Rhodesian white wage earners averaged 5,048 Rhodesian dollars last year, or $8,278 U.S.). This 1-to-11 ratio has remained constant since colonial days, and Rhodesia's rapid ecogulf that separates them from the minority.

Rhodesia ranked as Africa's eighth richest country in World Bank estimates in 1972, but white domination of production is overwhelming; more than 55

Rhodesian Statistics:
Population:	277,000 whites; 6.2 million blacks.
Average annual earnings:	$8,278 for whites; $758 for blacks.
Control of agriculture:	6,200 white families produced $75 million worth of goods; 660,000 black families produced $185 million.
Average credit line available for farmers:	$28,700 for whites; less than $3.20 for blacks.

percent of the gross domestic product of $2.75 billion (U.S.) in 1974 derived from manufacturing, agriculture, mining and construction, the rest from distribution and services. In the productive sector, the Whitsun Foundation, a multiracial development organization, estimates informally that a maximum of 12 percent of this sector is in black hands.

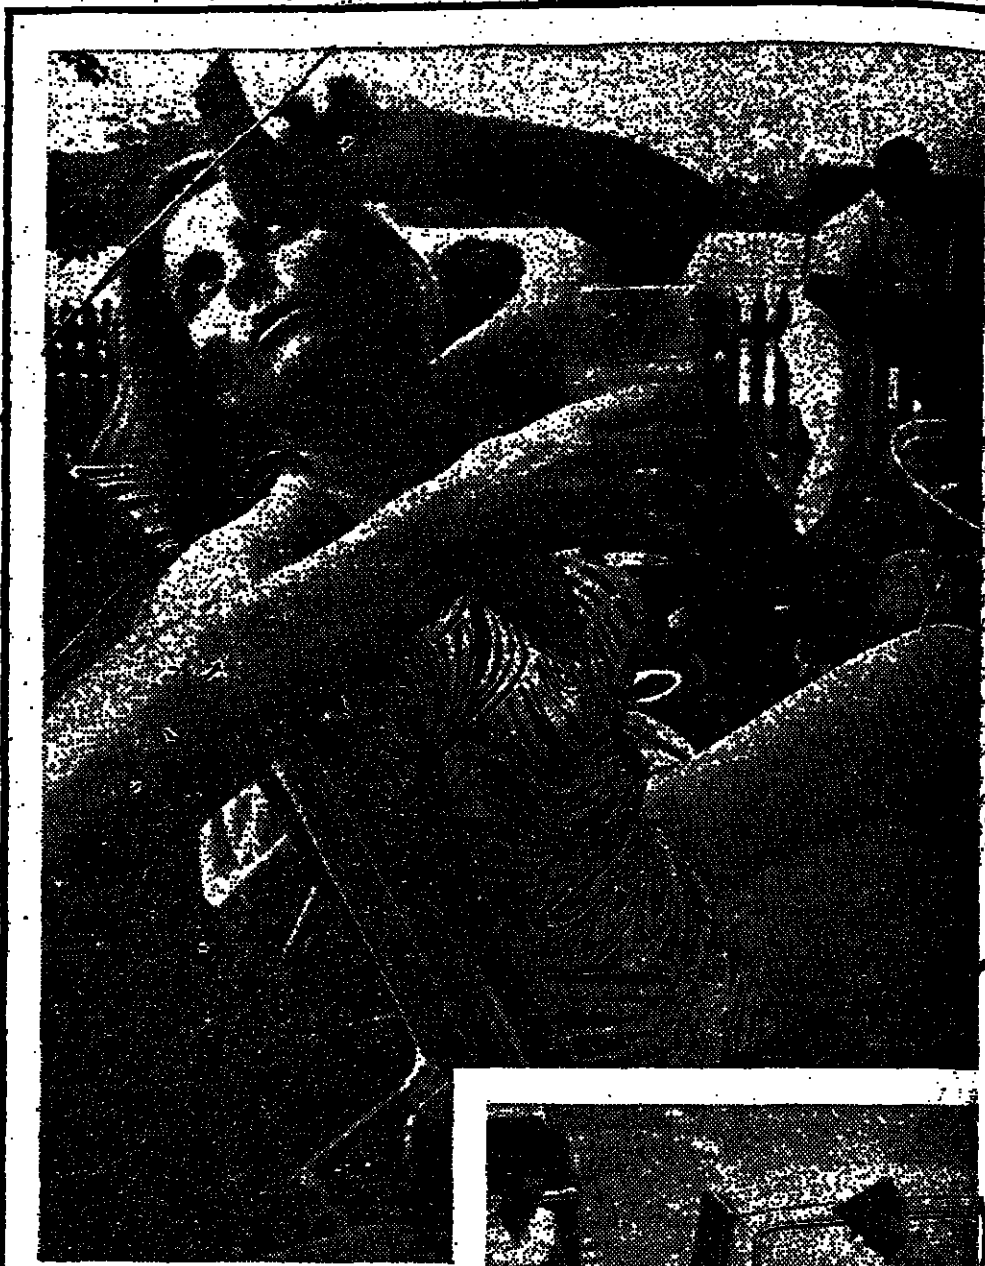

About half of this black-controlled production is in agriculture, where the racial disproportion is perhaps the most distinct. Last year, 6,200 white farming families produced $374 million (U.S.) worth of commodities; 660,000 black families accounted for $165 million (U.S.). The white output came almost exclusively from commercial farming, with the help of 350,000 black laborers. The black farmer produces 70 percent of his output for his own subsistence.

Setting aside the most productive land for whites, much larger and therefore more economic holdings and access to modern technology and credit facilities—as well as superb management and cheap labor—are responsible for this disproportion. The Whitsun Foundation reports that last year $178 million (U.S.) in credit was available for white farmers, or $28,700 (U.S.) per farmer, but less than $3.20 (U.S.) per black farmer.

In manufacturing and mining—32.4 percent of the gross domestic product—white control is almost total. The rate of investment is about $650 million (U.S.) a year, preponderantly from foreign sources. A leading Salisbury banker estimated that 90 percent of Rhodesian mining (gold, copper, chrome, nickel, bituminous, asbestos, among others) was owned, in roughly equal shares, by American, British and South African interests. In manufacturing, he estimated an 80 percent foreign share, evenly split between South Africans and Britons.

In the total uncertainty over what the future holds, caused by the lack of any meaningful dialogue between Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's Government, which until last month refused to admit the possibility of majority rule in the foreseeable future, and the consequent total concentration of the factionalized nationalist movement on gaining political power, the future of Rhodesia's economic structure has been left to the gods. Neither the Government nor the nationalists have made public, nor indeed seem to have conceived, concrete plans on the shape of the state that both sides say should be open to both races.

They Now Wonder What Can Be Salvaged

Karl Bruehl/Liaison; Michael Evans/Contact

Minority life in Rhodesia: A farmer's wife at poolside; a traffic policeman in Salisbury; soldiers with landowner whose property is near the Mozambique border. Despite the obvious good life, Rhodesia's whites resent accusations that they have not worked for what they have.

No doubt the Whitsun Foundation, bankers and business leaders are right when they say that the economic interests of all Rhodesians would be best served by a solution that would maintain peace and not drive the white population into flight. Such an exodus would throw farming, mining and manufacturing into chaos, from which recovery would be long and hard. They propose plans for a gradual redistribution of income and control. But the recent history of neighboring Angola and Mozambique gives no encouragement to gradualism, and they are the most relevant precedents, in time and in place.

Those who offer the moderate proposals are aware that even if they, as captains of the economy, see the virtues of their plans, the social history of Rhodesia since the white man came to settle less than a century ago makes it as unlikely that blacks, once in political power, can be as patient as they would like them to be before claiming effective economic power, as it is unlikely for most whites, accustomed to Rhodesian ways, to accept African equals or superiors on the job.

The bitter question of whether to en leave behind a land they love and most of own is acute in the minds of white Rhodesians. Perhaps their places will be taken, as countries on this continent by white ex government contract, with no sense of here. The tragedy for the whites who bet the odds against reasonableness and into the transition period to come are as it political, social and economic distance the them from the majority.

Many who are now pondering emigration if they leave they will look beyond choice, neighboring South Africa, because not want to face more than once the pain up stakes.

Henry Kamm is a correspondent for York Times who has been reporting on Rhodesia.

Weak Europe Economies Now Weaker

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH economic version of the domino theory is assuming about short-term business prospects...

ments all count as the catalyst for economic growth, will falter. A lower rate of consumer spending in France, for instance, means the French will buy fewer cars.

The dangers have been aggravated by currency depreciation, political uncertainties and the rising specter of protectionism.

Before the joint statement of the Confederation of British Industries and the Trades Union Congress last week, the Labor Government of Prime Minister James Callaghan had been fighting demands for protection from the left wing of the parliamentary Labor Party.

Italy has already imposed an import-deposit scheme, which makes it more costly for Italian importers to buy from abroad.

The Currency Woes

The unbridled exchange-rate depreciation of the British pound, the Italian lira and the French franc is causing further anxiety.

In the 1930's, countries actively engaged in competitive devaluations and other protectionist action to try to revive their economies.

Lower valued currencies should stimulate exports by reducing their cost in the international market.

their economies to the point where their citizens will buy more British, French and Italian products.

But economic growth has now turned sluggish in all the non-Communist industrialized countries.

With the economic contraction now underway and unpromising economic prospects for the Communist bloc and the developing world, both areas encumbered by debt, it is difficult to see, according to many analysts, where new export growth will come from.

A Question of Willpower

There is an additional worry in the currency situation because of the now widely recognized vicious circle of exchange depreciation and internal inflation.

The fall in the lira in the last seven months is largely responsible for an increase in the annual rate of Italian inflation, from 11 to 17 percent.

Normally the austerity moves, such as those announced by Britain, France and Italy (higher money rates, tighter control of the money supply, and in France's case higher taxes), could be expected to restore investor confidence and generate interest in holding pounds, lire and francs.

Behind the disturbing reaction of the markets are doubts whether the governments, in a period of high unemployment which can only be aggravated by austerity, will have the political strength to enforce the measures and actually curb inflation.

In Britain there had been hopes that unions would show moderation under a painfully negotiated social contract with the Government.

In Italy, Prime Minister Giulio Andreotti is counting on Communist support to get his program through the Parliament. The party, under a new power-sharing arrangement with the minority Christian Democratic Government, can easily withdraw its support or demand unpalatable conditions.

So as the governments review their policies, the fear is that they may take politically the easiest, but economically the most perilous, way out by moving down the 1930's path of protectionism.

"The world has shrunk," Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger noted recently. "But the nations of the world have not come closer together."

Clyde H. Farnsworth is a correspondent for The New York Times, specializing in economic affairs and based in Paris.

Mardian Alone Gets New Trial

A Federal appeals court in Washington has reversed the 1974 Watergate conspiracy conviction of Robert C. Mardian, a former Assistant Attorney General and political coordinator for the Committee for the Re-election of the President when the break-in at Democratic National Committee headquarters took place.

Though the ground for the reversal was technical, the court also said in its brief opinion that the evidence against Mr. Mardian "was not as strong as that marshalled against his co-defendants." Mr. Mardian had been found guilty of conspiring to cover-up the break-in along with the three most powerful figures in the fallen Administration of Richard M. Nixon.

In a brief opinion last week, the appeals court judges said that John J. Sirica, presiding judge at the Watergate trial, had erred in failing to grant Mr. Mardian's request for severance after his attorney had to leave the case because he became ill.

The four defendants had remained free pending appeal.

U.S. Steel in Pollution Pact

The United States Steel Corporation has agreed to spend $600 million that would bring its Clairton, Pa., coke works into compliance with pollution control laws by 1983. The agreement and the manner in which it was reached are a case study in industrial pollution abatement.

The plant, the largest of its kind in the world, now produces 7.5 million tons of coke from coal annually as fuel for steel plants blast furnaces. In the process, the coke plant sends over 42,000 tons of pollutants into the atmosphere each year. The company had been charged with 241 violations of a 1972 consent order, by local and state environmental agencies which had asked that the courts impose a $3 million fine.

Under the new agreement, reached after more than a year of negotiations, the fine was not levied, and the corporation was provided with limited immunity from prosecution if new control equipment fails to achieve compliance with clean air standards. That equipment will cost the company $155 of the $600 million; the balance will be spent on new coke furnaces, and modernizing the existing plant. Modernized equipment will also mean less pollution; it may mean, the company says, fewer jobs.

The Vice-Presidential Candidates Follow Their Leaders Devotedly

The Other Race: At Best, Only Echoes

When the Vice Presidential candidates debated on national television time last week, they received what was, for Vice Presidential candidates, unusual attention. Here is how it was before, and will be after, their moment of unwonted glory.

it is thought he can do the most good, the industrialized Northwest and the Midwestern farm belt. He has made two California trips, and is on the way there for a Thursday tour now. He has generally stayed out of the South, although he has twice been to Florida; he is not scheduled to return.

Mostly, he is preaching to the converted, devoting himself in particular to labor—from huge conventions to small groups of men waiting for work in hiring halls. Like the other candidates, however, he is really campaigning not for people, but for television. His travels are designed, and almost always do, hit three different local markets a day.

At first, it seemed quite possible, even likely, that there would be friction between the two men, a necessary product of the differences between Mr. Mondale's fairly orthodox liberalism and Mr. Carter's less easily definable, but certainly more moderate or conservative, views. Not so, not thus far.

What was overlooked in those early predictions of inevitable clash was Mr. Mondale himself. Hubert Humphrey was his mentor, but Mr. Mondale does not lead the cavalry charge. He is known as a man with little impulse for the desperate fight; he refrained from splitting with the Johnson Administration's Vietnam policies until early 1969, after Mr. Humphrey was no longer Vice President.

The Mondale Manner

By LINDA CHARLTON

When a contest was held aboard Walter F. Mondale's chartered jet to give his campaign plane a suitable name—his running mate's identical aircraft had been christened "Peanut I"—the suggestions that trickled into a manila envelope taped to a bulkhead were much the same. "We Try Harder," was one, and "Why Not the Second Best?" was another; "Peanut Vendor" was a third, and there was also "The Second Coming." What almost all the applicants reflected was the nature of Mr. Mondale's present undertaking. The senior Senator from Minnesota is working very hard for a post that has only one prescribed function, one that is mostly becoming, and one real purpose: to wait, trying not to look helpful.

"Fritz" Mondale is, after all, not working for himself but for Jimmy Carter. It is for these two months or so, like most Presidential candidates, that he was really chosen, for his ability as a campaigner and for what were perceived to be those strengths that would complement, or even cancel out, Mr. Carter's political weaknesses.

Mr. Mondale is a liberal Democrat from the Midwest, the political protégé of Hubert H. Humphrey. He is beloved of the labor movement, possessed of expertise in the tangled matters of taxes and budget, and has a record of involvement in such worthy but generally noncontroversial causes as improving health care and education and provision for the elderly.

Because he rarely faces a hostile audience, or any that is not preselected by his own record, it is difficult to assess how successful Mr. Mondale is in his designated role. He is a good campaigner, and an effective stump speaker. He can bound down the steps of the "Minnesota Fritz"—that was the name he eventually chose for his plane—with a brilliant smile, and look delighted to hear a local high school band lurch into "the Minnesota Rouser."

He has a standard speech by now, which he has been delivering with occasional variation around the country since mid-August. It is essentially an assault on the Ford Administration's policies, particularly economic policies, with statistics pertinent to the group he is addressing.

The Dole Approach

By DOUGLAS E. KNEELAND

WASHINGTON—In a florid introduction of Senator Robert J. Dole in Richmond the other day, Gov. Mills Godwin of Virginia may have said it all as far as Vice-Presidential candidates are concerned. "It's no small undertaking for a man to undertake what he's undertaking," Governor Godwin declared.

There is a kernel of wisdom there that could apply to almost any other Vice-Presidential candidate. Elected Vice Presidents have more than a little in common with the "good children" of the old admonition who are supposed to be "seen and not heard." Vice-Presidential candidates, on the contrary, are heard a lot, at least by the almost always partisan groups they are permitted to address, but they are not seen by many people, at least not on national network news.

Senator Dole does not seem to have many illusions about the role of Vice President, let alone that of candidates for that office. He has acknowledged all along that he never did ask Mr. Ford before his selection in Kansas City if the President had anything special in mind for him should they be elected. In fact, the Senator has always seemed surprised if anyone raised the question. He has carefully, if not always artfully, avoided answering almost any question that called for a serious discussion of policy.

Senator Dole was almost certainly chosen as a last-minute compromise at Kansas City in August, largely because the Ford forces had to pick someone who could protect their rear against the disgruntled supporters of Ronald Reagan.

When President Ford, after winning the nomination, met with his defeated rival, the former California Governor apparently said a kind word about Senator Dole, a one-time Republican National Chairman. That seems to have done it. Few observers have been able to come up with many other reasons for the selection of Mr. Dole, a Midwestern Protestant, who like the President, has long been associated with Washington.

The Senator also makes the Republican ticket somewhat more acceptable to farmers, who have been unhappy about Mr. Ford's embargo on grain sales to the Soviet Union, an advantage that has now taken on much greater importance with the departure from the Administration of Earl L. Butz, a darling of many normally Republican farmers. Mr. Dole had recently taken to saying that the President had told him he would be consulted on agricultural matters, and he has been emphasizing that point since Secretary of Agriculture Butz resigned.

He can be expected to continue to do so as he makes his appointed rounds of the outposts that line the Vice-Presidential campaign trail. This week they will include Waterloo and Sioux City, Iowa, Cape Girardeau and Springfield, Mo., Stillwater, Okla., Corpus Christi and Lubbock, Texas.

In terms of the Democrats, the principal advantage of Mr. Dole seems to be that he is an experienced speaker with a rough tongue who Republican strategists might have hoped would ruffle Mr. Carter at some point. There is little evidence that he has yet.

So far, he has tried gamely to carry out his assigned roles, praising Mr. Reagan effusively in those states where the Californian is still much beloved, entertaining his largely Republican audiences with his celebrated wit while slashing at Mr. Carter.

The Senator has always been a fiercely partisan Republican loyalist. But he is also a quintessential political realist. He was a staunch defender of President Nixon almost to the end—but when the end overlapped with his own tough 1974 re-election race in Kansas, Senator Dole showed considerably less fervor, in public, at least, for the cause. Now he tells Republican audiences that it was Mr. Nixon and those around him who were responsible for Watergate and not the national party of which Robert Dole was chairman.

The State of The Economy: Advance is Now a Crawl

By LEONARD SILK

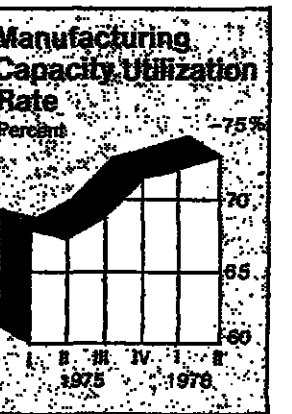

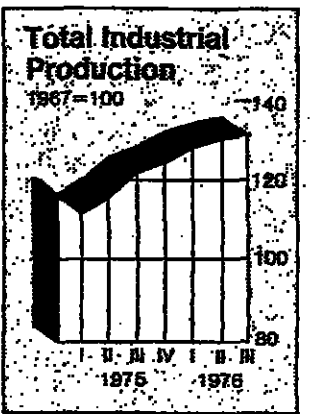

The outcome of this year's Presidential election will be influenced in large part by voters' conscious or subliminal hopes and fears about the state of the economy—and what it means in terms of their own pocketbooks and jobs. What, then, is the condition of the American economy right now, as objectively as it can be perceived and stated?

The economy's advance, seemingly so vigorous early this year, has now slowed to a crawl. The broadest measure, real gross national product, or the nation's output of goods and services, corrected for inflation, rose at the exceptionally high annual rate of 9.2 percent in the first three months of this year. But rate of climb slowed to 4.5 percent in the second quarter. And, although official figures for the July-September quarter will not be out until this week, most private economists estimate that the rate of growth has slipped further to somewhere between 3 and 4 percent per annum.

The slowing growth rate accounts for the rise in unemployment since last spring. The economy behaves like Alice in Wonderland: it must keep up with rising productivity and a growing labor force. And if the economy doesn't run fast enough, it loses ground in terms of unemployment. The jobless rate, which had gone down to 7.3 percent in May, climbed back up to 7.9 percent in August, and then held at 7.8 percent in September, a decline that is not considered statistically significant. Joblessness has been consistently higher among blacks and other minorities, young people, and women. In sum, while total employment has increased three million since early last year, the economy has not grown fast enough to keep up with the number of people looking for work.

One of the anomalies of the immediate situation is that, despite the six-month slowdown in the rate of recovery, inflation has speeded up. The steep recession of 1974-75 did what standard economic theory would have predicted: It brought the rate of price increase down from the double-digit levels of 1974 to a rate that the Administration believed, earlier this year, might be around 4 percent. In the first quarter of 1976, the over-all price index used to deflate gross national product rose at an annual rate of only 3.2 percent. But in the second quarter, that figure—known as "the GNP deflator"—got up to a 5.2 percent rate. It may have gone still higher in the third quarter. The wholesale sale price index climbed in September by nine-tenths of 1 percent—or 10.8 percent at an annual rate. Admittedly, wholesale food prices jump about from month to month, confusing the short-term picture. But industrial prices move more stably (due to the heavier role played by wages), and in September industrial prices also rose at a 10.8 percent annual rate.

Nevertheless, most economists think the trend rate of both wholesale and consumer prices is "only" about 6 percent. And very few economists expect a return to double-digit inflation in 1977, no matter whether Mr. Ford or Mr. Carter is elected. Mr. Carter might add a little more inflationary heat to the economy in an effort to get unemployment down faster—as his chief economic adviser, Prof. Lawrence Klein of the University of Pennsylvania, predicted last week. President Ford, for his part, told a group of editors and publishers last week that "I don't think there is any need for change in our economic policy. We anticipated this pause after the first quarter." His principal economic adviser, Alan Greenspan, has said that the economy's normal pattern of advance is "spurt, pause, spurt," implying that a spurt lies shortly ahead.

3. As a result, inventories climbed too quickly, and production rates had to be slowed. The rate at which plants and equipment were used began to flatten out.

But a great many businessmen and investors are acting now as though they have serious doubts about the vigor or morality of the expansion. The stock market has been dropping. Business spending on plant and equipment this time has lagged behind past pickups, and many businessmen show signs of their hesitancy to invest in more plant and equipment is due to their anxieties about what a Carter Administration would do. The historic highs in long-term interest rates, reflecting the overall rate of inflation, also contribute to keep investment down.

But the persistent gap between the sluggish rate of industrial production and already available production capacity may be a more fundamental explanation of why business isn't spending more on new plants: If sales are not expected to increase, there is no point in investing in increasing capacity.

Consumers are also behaving anxiously. Retail sales have been following a sawtooth pattern in recent months, going nowhere in particular. Whether consumers are off their feed because of revived worries about inflation, unemployment, the election of either Mr. Ford or Mr. Carter, or whatever, they have not been fulfilling businessmen's earlier hopes.

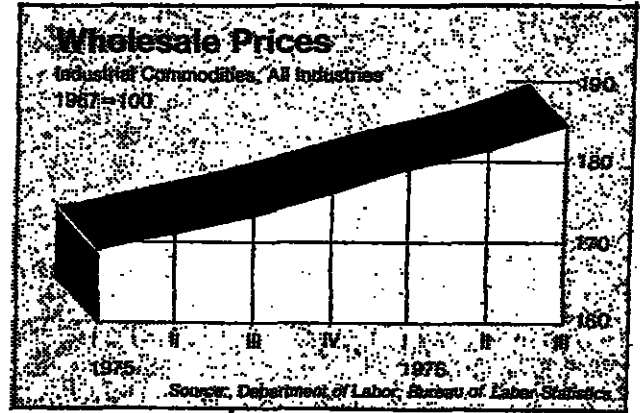

Is this, then, a pause that refreshes or depresses? Much of the answer depends on analysis of what caused the pause and what will then eventuate from it.

To a degree, the six-month pause appears to have resulted from the unusually rapid turnaround in business inventories in the first quarter of this year. Business seems to have refilled its shelves and warehouses so fast that a stimulus that might have been expected to last through most of the year ended abruptly after the first quarter. This would suggest that the pause is simply a period of digestion that should soon give way to a somewhat healthier rate of advance. Most economists now think real GNP will move up to about a 5 percent annual rate of increase in the final quarter of 1976 and stay at approximately that rate through 1977. That would not be fast enough to cure unemployment but it ought to bring the jobless rate down to slightly below 7 percent by the end of next year. A significantly better performance than that is likely to depend on sizable Government job and manpower programs. Mr. Carter's advisers are pushing for them; Mr. Ford's are not.

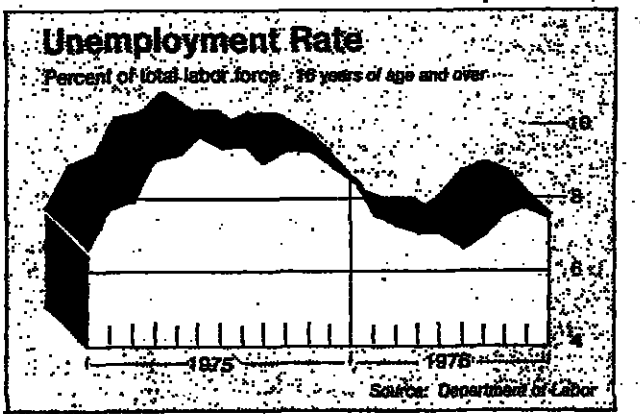

The slowed rate of advance this year appears to have been partly the result of a shortfall of $15 billion in Federal expenditures. However, the money is still in the Government's pipeline: past budget "authorizations" will in turn become "obligations" and then "expenditures" in the usual lead-lag process. This may mean that the unanticipated drag of 1976 will become an extra push in 1977.

But none of this is helping at the moment. When voters will be going to the polls three weeks from now, many will feel frayed at the cuffs, down at the heels and slightly shaken over the last encounter with the cashier at the check-out counter. Some will remember much worse. Others will remember much better.

4. Despite the sluggish economy, prices continue to rise, for reasons that are not clear to economists. However, the inflation rate (illustrated here by the Industrial Price Index) has slowed from the double-digit rate of two years ago.

5. Slower production rates means fewer workers are needed; declines in unemployment rates were suddenly reversed in August. A slight decline in September is considered insignificant.

With Major Exceptions, Pollution Controls Are Working

Industry Is Finally Cleaning Up After Itself

By GLADWIN HILL

When public clamor for environmental reform reached a crescendo a half dozen years ago, smoking factories became a symbol of air pollution, and industry's horrific discharge pipes a conspicuous culprit in water pollution. Industry, along with automobiles and municipal sewage, was a prime target of ensuing legislation, notably the Clean Air Act of 1970 and the Water Pollution Control Act of 1972.

Industry's role in pollution has been underscored anew by a succession of recent events: General Electric's agreement to pay $3 million indemnity for its contamination of the Hudson with PCB's; the imposition of a $13 million fine on Allied Chemical for poisoning a Virginia river with the pesticide kepone, and last week's announcement of United States Steel's agreement to spend $155 million to muzzel the notorious stacks of its Clairton, Pa. coke plant.

These diverse but kindred developments raised some obvious questions about industrial pollution abatement. How much pollution is industry responsible for? How sedulously is abatement being pursued and how fast is it progressing? And how much is it costing?

The short answer, according to Federal officials, is that industry has been responsible for a great deal of pollution, that, with some exceptions, its corrective work has been progressing well, and that costs have not in general been exorbitant or painful. Of about 200 million tons of regulated pollutants going into the air annually as of 1974, more than one-third, in terms of sheer weight, came from industry, including power plants. In terms of noxiousness, industry is responsible for most of the pollution. Half of that 200-million ton total is carbon monoxide, colorless, odorless and dangerous only in high densities; it comes mainly from automobiles. But industry was the source of nearly all the particulates and sulfur-oxides and half of the oxides of nitrogen, along with 15 percent of the hydrocarbons.

A standard measure of water pollution is two categories of chemicals, suspended solids and oxygen-consuming substances. By far the biggest producers of these are "non-specific sources," such as land runoff. But in terms of specific sources, industry's share of suspended solids almost matches community sewage; and its input of oxygen-absorbing substances is about 30 times that of community sewage.

The Clean Air Act of 1970 said that industrial air pollution, along with automobile smog, should be abated by mid-1975 to the point where the whole country would have air meeting Federal health standards. The United States is still considerably short of that goal. But the Environmental Protection Agency reported in May that of 20,000 major stationary sources of air pollution (most of which are industrial), 82 percent were in compliance with emission limits or were on stipulated cleanup schedules.

The story is similar on water pollution. The 1972 law set two deadlines: mid-1977 for a partial cleanup ("best practicable" treatment of fluid wastes before discharge into waterways) and 1983 for near-total cleanup ("best available" treatment). The agency reported a few days ago that 91 percent of the 4,655 major industrial dischargers would be in compliance with their discharge limits by the mid-1977 deadline. The cleanup has by no means been easy.

Up to last January the environmental agency, principally responsible for pollution abatement, had to initiate nearly 13,000 legal enforcement actions in the fields of air and water pollution and pesticides, resulting in nearly $10 million in fines and penalties. Much litigation is pending.

Industry says it has been spending $6 billion a year on new pollution control facilities, about 5 percent of its total outlays for new facilities. But that collective ratio obscures the fact that for some industries the burden has been much heavier. According to the Department of Commerce, the nonferrous metals industry's outlay last year reached 24 percent of its capital expenditures, the paper industry's 16.8, and in the steel industry's blast-furnace plants, 13.5 percent.

However, the predictions of economic catastrophe that accompanied the enactment of the pollution laws have remained conspicuously unrealized. Since 1970, the environmental agency has tallied only 81 plant closings attributable to pollution requirements, involving 17,600 jobs. Conversely, the Council on Environmental Quality estimates that pollution control is providing more than one million jobs.

Sometimes industrialists see tactical or economic advantages in bucking pollution abatement. U. S. Steel has battled the government about cleaning up its facilities in a half dozen localities, and was recently singled out by John R. Quarles Jr., deputy director of the environmental agency, as having "compiled a record of environmental recalcitrance second to none." Reserve Mining, jointly owned by the Republic and Armco steel companies, has spent millions on legal fees and public relations campaigns to protract its pollution of Lake Superior with wastes from iron ore deposits that may be exhausted by the time litigation is resolved.

While the agency's efforts to develop solutions to environmental problems are starting to pay off, there is still a long way to go. The National Academy of Sciences has calculated, for instance, that the statutory 1983 water quality objectives will allow industry to discharge annually only 300 million pounds of oxygen-absorbing wastes and 4.2 billion pounds of suspended solids. As of 1973, the latest available data period, the academy recently reported, actual industry discharges were exceeding those goals 14-fold and 30-fold, respectively.

The F.B.I. Has Its Own Underground Of Informers

By JOHN M. CREWDSON

WASHINGTON—A few days ago, a Denver indicted Timothy Redfean on charges of a second degree.

That in itself was not remarkable. The 30-year-old son of a Protestant minister had previous seven other burglaries, including one theft of guns and other items from an East Denver Redfean had also been the subject of a Federal investigation and, as one might expect in young man gone wrong, received psychiatric care that included a month's hospitalization of a "depressed condition."

What makes the matter remarkable is that he carried out the burglaries, became an extortion case and underwent hospitalization Redfean was working as a secret informant at the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The agency did not on despite his troubles but continued to pay and wound up raising his salary to $400 a month.

At a time when pentitent informants are with some regularity, the Redfean case has reasons. The first is that the burglary for, recently indicted involved not guns or other four cartons of documents stolen from the of the Socialist Workers Party, the organization he had been assigned to spy by the bureau; that Mr. Redfean's personal history and its closure that he had first burglarized the party years before the theft for which he was in to focus some central, but for the most part questions about the bureau's use, and mismanagement network of political informers.

In his "Constitutional History of England" May wrote: "Men may be without restraint; they may pass to and fro at pleasure; steps are tracked by spies and informers, the down for criminality, their associates are spinsters—who shall say that they are free."

For years, the bureau has encouraged the great majority of its informants—to the are never "informers"—were not the menace Sir Thomas's dark vision but simply patriotic having witnessed a criminal act or overhear conversation, were moved to report what the authorities. If any money changed hands, it was a nominal amount for expenses, often on a "C.O.D." basis. The relationship was one, undertaken at the informant's pleasure.

That is not the picture that has emerged from the files of Mr. Redfean, or of Alan Selling of Ft. Joseph Burton of Tampa, Fla., who have the past 18th months.

The psychology of informants is fascinatingly imperfectly understood. But some of its elements are clear now. Patriotism is only one of the leads to working under cover for the F.B.I. M. created by the bureau to inform on Marxist growth the challenge because "I felt like I owed something." But Alan Selling, the 23-year-old wealthy Portland family, was bored and attracted by the "glamor" of being around G.M. Redfean's motive was probably the most common money. Although $400 a month is about the most ever pays a political informant, both he and discovered that it is possible to make a living as an informant.

A Common Characteristic

Almost, by definition, informants share a common emotional characteristic—the ability to least for a short time, two separate and compartmentalized lives. The strain that that entails accounts in part for the curious phenomenon: it who tires of the work, and, soured by the constant and confused by the docile nature of the "subver" he has penetrated, feels the need to purge himself a news conference.

Other recent disclosures, many of them contained in a 2,000-page bureau file on Mr. Redfean made public a court order, have helped transform the stereotypical informant as public-spirited citizen who walks street. For one thing, the bureau, actively seeks of its political informants, as it did with Mr. Burton by recruiting them and infiltrating them into organization, or by "burning" a member of subversion to report to the bureau on his compatriots. For another, the bureau relies heavily than it likes to admit on "informant" in its investigations of radical political organizations. Recent Government study estimated that informants used in 85 percent of the 1500 such cases on record.

The agent-informant relationship is anything but a simple one. The bureau checks prospective informants thoroughly and assesses their reputations and "background." The agents who interviewed Mr. Burton, he said, to know everything back from the day I was 13. The current director of the bureau, Clarence M. Callahan, has shown that he is genuinely interested in and changing many of the bureau's traditions and practices. There is no way of predicting what changes will result from an internal informant review program recently ordered. But judging from what is already known, there are a few questions that seem answers.

To what lengths has the F.B.I. gone in contact with informants and in protecting them from public disclosure, for example, never told public about Mr. Redfean's 1973 burglary of the Socialist Party.

Does the F.B.I. use its informants to undertake distasteful tasks that its own agents cannot undertake themselves? Mr. Selling told reports it been directed by his bureau controllers on two occasions to break into the home of an Oregon lawyer for clues to the whereabouts of his son, a fugitive of the Weather underground.

Given the closeness of the agent-informant relationship, the bureau legitimately maintain, as it did Redfean, that when an informant breaks the law, it is not in part responsible, even if it did not order him to do so. Finally, in what sorts of individuals does the F.B.I. trust? Judging from the Redfean case alone, clear at what point a political informant, who a collecting facts and allegations and making as clear as others that become part of a permanent record through his own instability and lawyer's claim to such a responsibility.

The F.B. Region Has Its Own Undergrowth Of Information

By JOHN R. ...

WASHINGTON—A few days ago, the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) announced that it had received information from a source that a group of individuals had been working on a project to infiltrate the FBI. The source claimed that the group had been successful in obtaining access to the FBI's internal communications system. This information was then used to identify and locate several high-ranking officials within the FBI. The FBI is currently investigating the source of this information and has issued a warning to the public to be vigilant against such activities.

At a time when the FBI is struggling to maintain its reputation for integrity and effectiveness, the revelation of such a breach is a significant blow. The FBI has a long history of being a trusted and effective law enforcement agency, but this incident has cast a shadow of doubt over its operations. The FBI must take immediate steps to address this breach and to ensure that such incidents do not recur in the future.

The FBI's response to this breach has been swift and decisive. The agency has launched a comprehensive investigation to identify the individuals responsible for the breach and to determine the extent of the damage. The FBI has also taken steps to strengthen its internal security measures and to improve its communication protocols. These actions are necessary to restore the public's confidence in the FBI and to ensure that the agency remains a force for law and order.

The FBI's commitment to transparency and accountability is evident in its handling of this incident. The agency has provided the public with regular updates on the progress of the investigation and has taken steps to address the concerns of the public. This approach is essential for maintaining the trust and support of the community that the FBI serves.

1976 Legislature. Blue Cross had asked 20.1 percent.

It is doubtful that Blue Cross will be granted all that it asks, which would raise premiums to $38.20 a month; but the burden will fall mainly on middle class subscribers who have almost no alternative but to pay the rates. Without Blue Cross or another group insurer a serious illness could destroy a family of the middle class financially. The well-to-do can afford the costs; the poor, generally, are eligible for Medicaid. In New York City, for example, Medicaid pays most hospital expenses for a family of four with an income below $5,000 a year.

But are there other alternatives? Commercial carriers, such as insurance companies, also offer hospitalization coverage. Their rates are usually higher than those of the nonprofit Blue Cross. No alternative coverage is being sought, so far as is known, but some groups are trying to get the state to find a way to cut hospital costs.

Middle-class subscribers may not find much relief even if a program of national health insurance, under consideration since 1912, is finally approved in Washington. They would still have to contribute to the cost, and it might be just as great because the programs under study are designed to spread the coverage and increase the level of medical care.

The latest request for Blue Cross increases affects the 44 percent of subscribers in the so-called community-rated category. They pay the premiums either individually or are members of small groups. Larger groups negotiate their own premiums.

Chief Bouza's Farewell?

Two developments last week have made it clear that dissension and poor morale in the New York City Police Department are not confined to the 18,000 patrolmen demonstrating over salaries and work schedules, but reach into the upper levels of the department.

Assistant Chief Anthony V. Bouza, one of the department's highest ranking and more controversial commanders (he has disagreed with a number of long-standing police procedures), said that the 26,000-member force, already reduced because of budget cuts, could be trimmed 10 percent more without affecting crime control or other services by "weeding out psychos, criminals and the unfit."

Chief Bouza, who is said to be under consideration for a major job with the Transit Authority Police Department, is being investigated for what some consider his weak handling of off-duty police demonstrations and other disorders.

Police Commissioner Michael J. Codd said that Chief Bouza and 100 other commanders would have to take a "refresher course" or attend "workshops" on the proper way to deal with rallies and disorders. The Police Department has been criticized for its Assistant Chief Anthony V. Bouza handling of off-duty police protests. No demonstrators were arrested in the first two weeks of the marches despite the defiance of a court order and the violation of other laws.

The patrolmen continued their demonstrations last week, showing up at political rallies and Yankee Stadium, but the numbers and noise have diminished, apparently a sign of weakening resolve. The city steadfastly maintains it has no money to meet the demands of the officers.

Negotiations continued, but the dispute, now three weeks old, is becoming increasingly costly to the city. Because of the demonstrations by off-duty officers, the city has had to pay the on-duty police $850,000 in overtime.

More and More City Dropouts

The dropout rate in New York City high schools is rising to a level that is causing some education experts to say that for the first time more students are dropping out than graduating.

The State Board of Regents and the Queens Lay Advocate Service, a group of professionals interested in education, say that less than 50 percent of the students who enter the city public high schools graduate. The city Board of Education disagrees, and puts the dropout figure at 13.2 percent.

The figure depends on the definition of a dropout. The Regents base their conclusion on data from the State Education Department, which regards as a dropout any student who leaves school before graduating for any reason, other than death, and does not go to another school. The Queens group uses a similar definition. The board, however, describes as a dropout any 16- or 17-year-old who leaves school with an employment certificate (as opposed to a diploma) or any 17-year-old who is discharged from school.

Whatever the precise figure, everyone agrees that the dropout rate has been rising steadily. The Fleischmann Report, a comprehensive study of New York State education, found an attrition rate in city schools, from ninth grade to graduation, of 34 percent in 1966; it rose to 48.7 percent in 1971. The report said that the majority of dropouts were black and Puerto Rican, "members of the same ethnic groups not taught to read in elementary school."

Educators say the financial crisis in the city's schools can be expected to aggravate the social and economic factors usually associated with dropping out. Daisy K. Shaw, who directs the board's efforts to help potential dropouts, says the causes range from "low academic achievement, absenteeism, low aspirations, lack of emotional support from the family, personal and social problems, discrimination and a general feeling of hopelessness engendered by current economic problems."

Mrs. Shaw believes that the recent cuts in the high school guidance and counseling staff, who work with those prone to dropping out, will worsen the rate.

A Lost Privilege

Another trouble related to the financial hobbling of the schools was the teachers strike last fall, an illegal action for which the union has now been punished. The state last week took away the United Federation of Teachers' dues check-off privilege for two years or more, meaning that the union has to set up on its own a costly system for collecting members' dues.

The State Public Employment Relations Board did allow for easing of the financial penalty, however, by adding that the checkoff could be regained sooner if the union complied with the Taylor Law, which forbids strikes by public employees. This would entail renouncing its longstanding "no contract, no work" policy and its claim to a right to strike.

The board said it gave the union that chance for three reasons: The Board of Education's "extreme provocation" in the case of a previous teachers strike, the second of the three; the bad effect of the city's fiscal crisis on last year's negotiations; the severe impact of an extended period without dues checkoff on the union's resources.

The Taylor Law has also been invoked in strikes by the firemen's, policemen's and sanitation workers' unions. Clearly the law has not prevented all strikes in the public sector, but it has provided rational procedures for conducting labor relations in that area.

Puerto Ricans And Economics

It had been assumed by social scientists that Puerto Ricans entering the United States would achieve the same degree of economic success as all immigrant groups, but a new Federal study has concluded that they have not. The general economic condition of the mainland's 1.7 million Puerto Ricans, most of whom live in New York City, has actually declined in the 1970's.

According to the report, prepared by the United States Commission on Civil Rights, the percentage of Puerto Ricans living at or below what is considered the poverty level of income rose from 29 in 1970 to 32.6 in 1974. The comparable figure in 1974 for other Hispanic groups was 24 percent for Mexican-Americans and 14.3 for Cuban-Americans.

The Cubans and Mexican Americans, however, may not be comparable groups. Many who fled the Castro Government were from the middle and upper classes, who brought money, skills and education with them. Mexican-Americans have been entering the United States for more than a century. Puerto Ricans primarily only for the last 30 years. Thus the Mexicans have had longer to assimilate and to learn English. The Puerto Ricans still suffer language handicaps, which many blame on insufficient government programs, and that is believed to be one reason why they have not done as well financially as other groups.

But the main problem appears to be that they are the last group to arrive in the nation's large cities, particularly New York, at a time when those cities have not only stopped growing but are in decline and offering few opportunities to newcomers.

New York City has lost thousands of jobs in both the private sector and in the civil service. Almost 50 percent of the Puerto Ricans who held civil service jobs lost them in the recent cutbacks. In earlier years immigrant groups often moved upward into such jobs, and kept them.

The civil rights commission report criticized Federal agencies as not sufficiently responsive to the needs of the Puerto Rican community. It called for increased efforts to find jobs for Puerto Ricans and to reduce educational disadvantages by increasing funds to aid needy school children and to train bilingual teachers.

'Management' Is a Key Word at City Hall

New York's Bureaucracy Struggles With Streamlining

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

It was Clarence Day, in "Life with Father," who may have helped determine people's views of these matters when he asked his wife to time him with a stopwatch while he buttoned his shirt from the top down, and then the bottom up, to see which way was faster. The "efficiency expert" was perhaps ever since been a favorite target for jokes.

And yet it is a role that persists, even flourishes, in today's huge, unwieldy bureaucracies in government and industry. Universities, foundations and administrators themselves are turning increasingly to the study of management and organization. New York City's government has experimented for a long time with various means, devised by outside consultants and inside professionals, to get control of a bureaucracy that even its partisans acknowledge can be a monster of unfathomable waste and inefficiency. But getting control is crucial now, in view of the city's having to close its deficit, (last week estimated to be $500 million in fiscal 1978) and operate on a sound financial basis in the future.

When financial emergency hit 18 months ago, and it became clear that the city would have to scale down its work force of 370,000 employees (including those working for independent city agencies) "management" became the shorthand for those techniques by which the city supposedly would retrench and still perform its vital services adequately. "Management" was also something people said was the preserve of private business. And so amid great fanfare, Mayor Beame created a "management advisory board," headed by Richard Shinn, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, to undertake a drastic overhaul of the city's bureaucracy and install "modern management" techniques. After a year of work, what has the Beame administration and the Shinn committee produced?

"The important thing," Mr. Shinn says, "is that there is now a recognition that the city must be managed, that it is manageable and that it takes people professionally well-trained to manage. This whole concept is just now emerging, and the Mayor by his acts and appointments is recognizing it."

Mr. Shinn meets with John E. Zuccotti, the First Deputy Mayor, once a week and Mayor Beame every other week to discuss the steps the city is taking. In interviews, officials pointed to the following "management" changes in the last year and a half:

A sprawling system of computerized controls is being installed over the city's finances aimed at eliminating the possibility of "hidden deficits" in future municipal budgets. The so-called Integrated Financial Management System, which is costing more than $16 million to install, is the bulwark of reform of the city's books. It consists of a network of quarterly allocations, monthly reports and other mechanisms intended to insure that agencies don't overspend their allotments. The system was the primary accomplishment of Kenneth S. Axelson, the former deputy mayor who returned to the J. C. Penney Company last month after a year of government service.

Another system of monthly reports on a series of "missions" and "targets" in 30 city agencies—from pothole repairs to restaurant inspections—was launched July 1 under the supervision of Mr. Zuccotti and Jack Ukeles, a former New School management professor who is the executive director of the Shinn panel Mr. Zuccotti and others said they were pleased with the new system, although some officials were skeptical that it could accomplish more than reveal problems that if more visible would be no less intractable.

With Mr. Shinn's encouragement, two city agencies—the fire and highway departments—have been allowed to operate under something called "Management By Objective," a corporate technique giving separate units autonomy over their spending as a reward for agreeing not to overspend. In effect, this technique cedes some power from the city's budget professionals, who have long been protective of their authority in the spending-control area. But officials said they were pleased enough to think about expanding the program to still more agencies.

The Shinn panel has drawn on the expertise of its private-sector members to contribute studies leading to the proposed upgrading of funding for the municipal pension system and the creation of a deputy mayor for economic development. It reportedly is also studying the Mayor's office with an eye toward helping Mr. Beame decide whether still another deputy mayor—one for day-to-day operations—should be created. And it has been kept informed on the reorganization of the city's Budget Bureau, now called the Office of Management and Budget, under its director, Donald D. Kummerfeld. Among other things, Mr. Kummerfeld created a special unit of his office to handle management projects.

It is almost impossible for an outsider to judge the effectiveness of many of these management changes. The installation of the financial management system, however, has unquestionably brought the city's books out of the darkness and confusion that enshrouded them a year ago. The monthly indicators would appear to be at the very least a critical first step toward any kind of rational system of control. The organizational changes, including the "management by objective" techniques, will take much longer to prove themselves, particularly in view of the fact that vaunted changes of the past, such as the city's "superagencies," ended up with decidedly disappointing results.

To Mr. Shinn, perhaps the most significant changes in the Beame administration in the last year have been those in personnel. Mr. Zuccotti and Mr. Kummerfeld, a former investment banker, were brought in, along with Mr. Axelson and successor, John C. Campbell, the former chief accountant for the Securities and Exchange Commission, as well as J. Henry Smith, a former life insurance executive serving as Human Resources Administration, and Osborn Elliott, the new Deputy Mayor for Economic Development, who was editor in chief at Newsweek.

Mayoral aides recognize that the changes have enhanced Mr. Beame's control over city agencies and the unwieldy bureaucracy. They say the only alternative would be far there to be no control at all from anywhere. In any case, management, particularly the flow of information, does not bring changes by itself.

"It bothers me that people expect miracles," Mr. Shinn says. "We're making progress, we're getting attitudes changed. But we have to look at things realistically. There may be no headlines here, just a balance to sense that positive things are being accomplished that lie at the heart of the city's structure."

Headliners

Nobel Laureates

The first of this year's Nobel Prize winners have been announced in Stockholm. The others will be announced next week. The winners are:

Medicine. Dr. Baruch S. Blumberg won for the results of a study of different kinds of blood serum to discover why people of different ethnic and family backgrounds varied widely in their reaction to disease. During this research he discovered the so-called Australian antigen, which he determined was part of the virus that causes the most severe form of hepatitis. An antigen is the substance that causes the body to produce a chemical defense, or antibody, against a foreign substance. The isolation of this antigen has allowed scientists to screen blood donors as to possible hepatitis transmission, and has been instrumental in the development of an experimental hepatitis vaccine.

Dr. D. Carleton Wajsbek spent several years in the forests of New Guinea tracking down the origins of a disease called kuru, which was unique to a single New Guinea tribe. He discovered that the disease was caused by a virus transmitted when tribe members ate the brains of the dead in a ritual ceremony. This virus, concluded Dr. Gajdusek, caused a breakdown in the nervous system similar to that caused by other so-called slow viruses. Some slow viruses are able, because of their remarkable resistance and tiny size, to remain dormant and undetected within the body for long periods of time. These viruses are suspected of being the cause of diseases such as multiple sclerosis and Parkinson's disease.

Economics. Milton Friedman was awarded the economics prize, despite controversy among his peers over his conservative political views and activities. Few, however, have denied his scientific contributions, some of which have been accepted as valid throughout the economic world. Mr. Friedman disproved one of the axioms of Keynesian theory—that the more money consumers have, the larger proportion they will save, and the smaller proportion they will spend. Instead, said Mr. Friedman, those proportions remain relatively constant. Thus the notion of one-shot Government intervention to stabilize the economy, such as large single tax cuts or increases, may not work at all. Instead, Mr. Friedman argued, the money supply should be steadily increased at a rate roughly equivalent to non-inflationary economic growth. Mr. Friedman was also instrumental in changing international currency policy from that of fixed exchange rates to that of floating rates, which has generally resulted in a more stable world currency situation.

The Nobel committee also announced that there would be no Peace Prize awarded this year. It was the tenth time since World War II that no winner for the prize has been named. Two prizes may be awarded next year. There were 50 formal nominations for the prize, and it was learned that serious campaigns had been mounted in favor of former President Luis Echeverria of Mexico, for his work in attempting to reorder the great economic disparities between rich and poor nations, and a Roman Catholic nun, Mother Theresa, for her work among the poor in Calcutta, India. Newspapers in Norway and in other parts of the world had mounted a last-moment effort to award a prize to Betty Williams and Mairead Corrigan, who have risked public vilification and beatings to lead thousands of Protestants and Catholics in Northern Ireland on peace marches against the violence there. However, the deadline for nominations was in February, and the two Irish women never received serious consideration for this year's prize.

Kallinger Convicted, Sentenced

Joseph Kallinger, named as the man who robbed homes and molested women in a number of suburban neighborhoods, has been sentenced to life in prison for the murder of a nurse last year. Mr. Kallinger had also been found guilty of armed robbery and contributing to the delinquency of his son, Michael, who accompanied him during the crime binge. The jury refused to accept defense contentions that Mr. Kallinger was insane when he committed the murder. Judge Thomas F. Dalton ordered the sentence to run concurrently with a previous sentence of 30 to 80 years given Kallinger for binding and robbing four women in a Pennsylvania suburb. The effect could be to keep Mr. Kallinger in prison for life, regardless of parole considerations.

The Restoration

Once the New York Yankees owned the baseball world. But in the mid-sixties hard times beset them, and a World Series loss to St. Louis in 1964 marked their last appearance in a championship game. Last week they were restored to glory, principally because of the bat of Chris Chambliss. In the final inning of the final game against the Kansas City Royals, Chambliss hit the first pitch thrown him over the right field fence, thereby winning the American League pennant for the Yankees. Chambliss's homerun was not his only contribution: He set records for both number of hits and number of runs batted in during the playoff series.

Remembering Hiroshima, Texas Style

The United States Government has formally apologized to several Japanese, including Mayor Takeaki Araki of Hiroshima, who had protested the re-enactment in the United States last week of the dropping of the atom bomb on Hiroshima. Paul Tibbets, who was the pilot during the original mission on August 6, 1945, flew a B-29 through a simulation of the bombing that included a mock mushroom cloud. The show was sponsored by a Texas-based aircraft preservation group as a fund raising event, and drew 40,000 spectators at Harlingen, Tex. Mayor Araki said the show "trampled in the spirit of Hiroshima and was a blasphemy against the many people still suffering from the aftereffects of the blast."

A Mistrial for Susan Saxe

A mistrial has been declared in the trial of Susan Saxe, an antiwar activist charged with participation in a Boston bank robbery in which a policeman was shot to death. Though another man has already been convicted of the murder charge, Massachusetts law holds those participating in a crime in which a murder is committed equally responsible for the murder. Miss Saxe had evaded local and Federal authorities for five years until she was arrested last year. But prosecution witnesses were unable to identify Miss Saxe as present during the robbery. As a result, the defense rested without calling a witness. Another trial is likely. Miss Saxe still faces sentencing on a Philadelphia bank robbery charge to which she has already pleaded guilty.

A Grand Lottery Prize

New York State's lottery, suspended last year after it was learned that grand prizes were sometimes awarded to unsold tickets, now has its first grand prize winner under new rules. He is Robert J. Netto, a 19-year-old gas station attendant married only three months ago. Mr. Netto, who makes $60 a week, now will receive $1000 a week for life as his prize, with a guaranteed minimum payment of $1-million. He said he hoped to purchase "houses," to pay his parents' debts, and to buy sports cars for his wife and himself.

The Vice-Presidential Debate

In the unprecedented television debate Friday night between Democratic and Republican Vice-Presidential candidates, Senator Walter F. Mondale summed up in a phrase the Democratic case against the Ford Administration: "Above all, we want a change in philosophy and direction."

And in the course of that debate—which in many ways was more instructive than the two Presidential debates that had preceded it—both Senator Mondale and his Republican opponent, Senator Robert J. Dole, helped clarify the philosophical differences between which the voter will have to choose Nov. 2 in the national election.

With a candor that those who had observed the previous Ford-Carter debates must have found refreshing, Senator Mondale placed his emphasis on social reform and economic rehabilitation in domestic policy—"We need a government that cares," he said—and on the upholding of liberal democratic standards in a foreign policy that "reflects the values and beliefs of the American people."

Conversely, Senator Dole made it clear that a new Ford Administration would be less interested in new initiatives in economic, social and foreign policy than in continuing along the path of the old one, and above all is "not for more spending . . . not for more governing . . ."

In contrast to the Republicans' distinctly negative approach as reflected by Mr. Dole, the Democratic nominee took a characteristically activist position on the need for a government that will move positively to reduce the present unacceptable rate of unemployment as well as inflation, to relieve the deplorable state of health care and housing, to reverse the present inadequate support of education, to establish strong and rational energy and environmental policies, to reform an unjust and inequitable tax system. In the broad area of foreign affairs, as Mr. Mondale points out, "it is important for us to identify, as the nation which above all stands for freedom and independence, with the aspirations of people around the world for those same objectives"—which is something the Ford Administration has unfortunately not succeeded in doing despite some striking successes in foreign policy that Secretary Kissinger has achieved.

The third Presidential debate will take place on Friday. If President Ford and Governor Carter, and their questioners, are able to do even more than Senators Mondale and Dole have done to bring out their differences in basic political philosophy, in their view of Presidential leadership, in their evaluation in broad and meaningful terms of the major problems facing this country—without getting mired in personalities or trivia as they have previously tended to do—they will greatly help the undecided American voter make up his mind how to vote, and even whether to vote at all.

Mr. Ford on Watergate

All Americans can greet with relief the announcement by Charles F. Ruff, the Watergate special prosecutor, that he has found no evidence that President Ford diverted campaign contributions to his private use. Revelations of any financial irregularity would have been a stunning blow to a country still recovering from the forced resignations of President Nixon and Vice President Agnew. If the matter had been left unresolved, it would have cast a disturbing shadow over the election.

Since the President's financial probity has been reaffirmed, it is unfortunate that Mr. Ford failed to dispose straightforwardly of another piece of Watergate debris that continues to clutter the political scene. That was his successful effort to organize Republicans and Southern Democrats on the House Banking Committee to block that committee's investigation of Watergate in September 1972.

At the behest of Mr. Ford, who was then House minority leader, the conservative coalition on the committee voted to deny the committee chairman—the late Wright Patman of Texas—the power to subpoena witnesses and documents, thereby effectively blocking the inquiry. It was not until 1973, when the Presidential election was safely past, that the Senate voted to conduct its inquiry under the chairmanship of Senator Sam Ervin.

Mr. Ford was first questioned about his role in that partisan blocking maneuver during his hearings for confirmation as Vice President in the fall of 1973. He said then that "to the best of his recollection" he had not talked to anyone in the White House about blocking the Patman committee investigation.

Since those confirmation hearings, however, the Nixon tapes have become available. On one of them, Mr. Nixon was heard telling his top aides to order Mr. Ford to head off the Patman investigation. Moreover, former White House counsel John W. Dean has written in his forthcoming book that Richard Cook, then in charge of liaison with House Republicans for the White House, was in touch with Mr. Ford a half-dozen times concerning the Patman matter.

At his news conference on Thursday evening, Mr. Ford was asked whether he had talked with Mr. Cook on Watergate at that time. Later, another reporter asked if—in the light of the Nixon tapes and Mr. Dean's book, both of which contradict his 1973 testimony—Mr. Ford had any better recollection than he had in 1973. The President ducked both questions by harking back to the favorable votes of the Congressional committees on his confirmation.

This lack of candor allows the issue of Mr. Ford's unwitting involvement in the early stages of the Watergate cover-up to linger unresolved. It would have been both accurate and refreshing if Mr. Ford had acknowledged that, of course, he helped kill the Banking Committee investigation. At that time, he must reasonably have assumed that he was performing no more than a partisan errand for the White House such as floor leaders of both parties in Congress routinely perform, especially during a political campaign. He presumably had no reason then to believe that the small fire he was putting out was actually a roaring forest fire that would eventually consume Mr. Nixon, his former Attorney General, and the most important members of his White House entourage.

President Ford's serious mistake in the whole Watergate affair was not his relatively minor intervention in the early stages but his ultimate decision to pardon Mr. Nixon without obtaining either a legal judgment of his guilt or a full, frank confession. That reckless disregard of the principle of equality before the law will always haunt Mr. Ford's record. By refusing to acknowledge that he acted at Mr. Nixon's behest in sabotaging the first proposed investigation of Watergate, Mr. Ford only succeeds in keeping Watergate alive in the public mind.

The Dangerous Smith Strategy

It appears that the head of the Rhodesia's white minority Government has carefully constructed a strategy to be put into effect if the forthcoming conference with black leaders in Geneva should break down—and that the United States figures heavily in that strategy.

Prime Minister Ian Smith says the United States and the West are pledged to help Rhodesia defend itself against the guerrilla war waged by black nationalists—if his Government negotiates in good faith at Geneva on a blueprint for majority rule within two years. Some of his colleagues are more specific. They say Secretary of State Kissinger told Mr. Smith that if he accepted the British-American proposals for a Rhodesian solution but the black leaders rejected them, the United States would favor lifting economic sanctions against Rhodesia and would help provide logistical support for the white regime's war effort.

Mr. Smith's plan seems to rely on the not-unrealistic notion that the rival black nationalist groups will be unable to come together on a sensible program at Geneva and will try to outdo one another in pressing demands unacceptable to Rhodesia's 270,000 whites. If that happens, Mr. Smith will doubtless propose that Britain, as conference chairman, invite other, more moderate black leaders to negotiate in behalf of Rhodesia's six million Africans. These would be mostly the traditional tribal leaders who are on the Smith Government's payroll, some of them in his Cabinet since last April.

Another facet of Mr. Smith's strategy is to insist that the five-point British-American program, which he accepted three weeks ago, is a "package" that must also be accepted in its entirety by the black leaders. But the blacks have emphatically rejected some aspects, including the provision that whites will serve as ministers of defense and justice in the interim Cabinet that will govern during the two-year transition.

Mr. Kissinger has remained silent on this point, but British Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland says the proposals accepted by Mr. Smith were merely "ideas" that could be "a useful basis for further discussion" at Geneva. Mr. Smith clearly intends to pose at Geneva as the epitome of reasonableness, who courageously accepted a program leading to black rule in two years, only to have it rejected by unreasonable black leaders who—he will imply—are probably taking their instructions from Moscow.

The United States should have nothing to do with any such strategy. The Administration ought to make it clear that there is no American commitment to support Rhodesia's white minority—economically or militarily—whatever may happen in Geneva and whatever scares may be floated about Soviet penetration of southern Africa. To side now with a discredited and illegal white regime—even one decked out with a few docile black chiefs—would be to damage irreparably this country's relations with the entire nonwhite world.

Autumn Sunlight

Autumn sunlight may be no different from spring sunlight, except that days now are getting shorter instead of longer. But when a sunny day follows a day or two of autumn murk and rain with a touch of autumn chill, it is like a blessing and a promise fulfilled. The dire threats to the earth's atmosphere are no less real, but they have been postponed a little longer. The sun mankind has known all his generations still is there, and we survive in its radiance. This we know again when sunlight clarifies the day.

Spring sunshine is the awakener, rousing buds, opening leaves and flowers to clothe the earth again and bring life to the winter-dormant world. Summer sunlight is the ripener, the hot accompaniment of growth and maturity, of fertile egg and seed, the insurance of life in summers to come. Winter sunlight is a token of rest, of the long sleep, the short day; it is proof that blizzards blow themselves out, that ice eventually melts, that no winter lasts forever.

But autumn sunlight is simply perfection of the day, glory of the season, the year's high achievement, somehow. It summons one to the outdoors, where even the autumn leaves partake of it. The maples shimmer, the birches glow, and when they drop their leaves their splendor is sunlight at their feet. Roadside grasses ripen with sunlit heads of seed. The sky is clean, clear and the sun itself is benevolent, the autumn sun making an autumn day a special moment in time.

If Ford Can Just Hold Us Steady . . .

To the Editor:

William V. Shannon has, as usual, correctly identified the real issue that faces the electorate in November ("In Search of Leadership," column Sept. 26). Shall we choose Ford, who shows absolutely no inclination to march off in new directions, or shall we seize the "opportunity for leadership" offered by Carter? With some misgivings, this ex-McGovern supporter will choose Ford, for Carter, despite his obvious "take-charge" qualities, has failed to show me that he would lead in a direction I would wish to follow.

On some issues, like tax reform, Carter's fresh view has seemed to be little more than an amalgam of shopworn clichés and fiscal nonsense. In other areas, Carter's proposed innovations would seem to exacerbate the problems they purport to solve. Zero-base budgeting, for instance, a technique for periodic justification of all anticipated expenditures, ought not to be used annually at all levels of the ponderous Federal bureaucracy, as Carter has suggested, since it generates a tremendous volume of paperwork.

Finally, when faced with critical social questions, Carter offers homilies on the restoration of trust and old values.

There is a generation right behind Carter in which women in record numbers are seeking fulfillment outside the home, in which millions have accepted abortion as a standard medical procedure, for which smoking marijuana is a common accoutrement of social intercourse and which to a large degree has replaced the traditional family with serial marriages and consensual relationships. These are not, perhaps, all happy developments. They raise problems for which no sage seems to have ready solutions. Carter doesn't seem to have any either.

All of which leads me to conclude that we may be better off without even the illusion of a "leader" in the White House for the next four years. Let's forget for a while about making America "once again a tribune of justice in the world community." (The last "leaders" who went off in that direction led us to Vietnam.) If Ford can just hold us steady (or "bumble on," as Shannon puts it), perhaps we the people will use the time to get our collective head together.

Foreign Policy Of 'Moral Inter'

To the Editor:

American "moral" insistence of pressures and extent threatened in the debate is not going to welcome than the cover practiced in the past. I stand with our support. Nations' efforts in the which have been less in the past largely because our support. A "made morality will be impaled of the world and may many problems as it is solve.

We should also insist supporting observance of laws such as the article Charter and the Geneva which we and a major have signed. Such support not only our ow of these laws but also military and diplomatic those governments which laws. Such a foreign policy ended the Cyprus crisis military aid to junta abruptly terminated and the rest of NATO in d removal of the Greek off the Turkish invasion cou forestalled, as would have quest damage to NATO.

What is the point of international and bilateral such as the Law and SALT if we are gals violations of past agree our allies with whom we have some influence?

I am not unaware of the United Nations in We should ask ourselves and in what ways our policy has contributed the U.N. before criticism

Nixon Pardon: 'Unresolved Matters'

To the Editor:

I disagree with Jimmy Carter's decision not to make a campaign issue of President Ford's pardon of Richard Nixon.

I have never comprehended why President Ford did not, as a condition of the pardon, require a full confession of guilt, which the Nixon Administration extracted of Agnew before his plea was accepted by the Federal prosecutors.

Now the recent disclosures of former Federal Aviation Administration head Alexander P. Butterfield, who first revealed the Nixon White House taping system, add new questions (news story Oct. 12) to the circumstances of the Nixon pardon. Butterfield charges that President Ford took office with a mandate from Nixon to dismiss him.

When Nixon got his pardon, President Ford at the same time voluntarily agreed to return to Nixon his tapes and records for safekeeping. Nixon was not then renowned as a faithful custodian of the tapes. Some tapes had already been reported lost or "unrecorded" and some critical segments were erased while he held them. Moreover, these records were still needed by the Special Prosecutor. Yet President Ford, while under no obligation, while bestowing the favor of a pardon and without any quid pro quo of confession, threw in an agreement to surrender these tapes to Nixon.

Why? There is little doubt that when Representative Ford was minority leader he received White House instructions to try to abort the initial investigations of Watergate by the House committee headed by then Representative Wright Patman.

Were these instructions on the tapes? What other conversations occurred between Representative Ford and President Nixon and his staff within the taping area during the taping period?

Is President Ford willing to clear these unresolved matters up before the election?

Will he push for the release now of all tapes of himself and Nixon, Haldeman, Ehrlichman, Colson and others relating to the Watergate break-in?

If the American public had known what was on the tapes in November 1972, the country might not have had to endure the tragedy of prosecution of a Vice President and the pardoning of a President.

The Vietnam Promise

To the Editor:

David Elliott's letter ("Of Vietnam and U.S. Domestic Politics," Sept. 24) shows a disingenuousness at least as great as Ambassador Scrantom's and surprising in a scholar.

Elliott overlooks the fact, inconvenient for his thesis, that the Ford Administration has sought "to shift the blame to the Vietnamese," that the Nixon-Kissinger team gave a commitment to President Thieu, equally separate from the text of the Paris Agreement, that the United States would intervene massively in the event of a North Vietnamese invasion of the South in violation of the cease-fire provisions of the agreement, such as evinced in the spring of 1975.

tional and legislative programs. The wolves in Alaska are the last remaining wolves in the country. They should be saved. I also wish to express my concern about the fact that the State of Alaska has requested that the moratorium on the hunting of eight marine mammals (polar bears, sea otter, walrus, sea lion, ringed, bearded and ribbon seals, and beluga whale) be lifted. The State of Alaska should not be given the chance to obtain jurisdiction over these mammals in light of its unsound wolf management policies.

A Question on Abortion

To the Editor:

In her letter to the editor of Sept. 25 Deborah R. Frost asks whether those opposing abortion would be willing to accept financial responsibility for persons who might be added to the indigent population as a result of the anti-abortionists' "misguided moral indignation."

The question is a fair one, at least from the forensic standpoint, but it invites the obvious counter-challenge. On the strength of her own implicitly more enlightened moral position, would Ms. Frost face a child, spared abortion and come to the age of understanding, and say to that child that in her view it properly should long since have been reduced to MURK garbage?

Reds Win Series Opener, 5-1, As Yanks Are Halted on 5 Hits

By MURRAY CHASS

CINCINNATI, Oct. 16—The Cincinnati Reds, who in recent years have become as familiar to baseball competition in October as the Yankees used to be, defused the Yankees' challenge and short-circuited their communication system in the first game of the World Series today.

With Joe Morgan starting the attack on a home run in the first inning, Cincinnati won, 5-1, in the Yankee's first series game since Oct. 15, 1964.

The Yankees, who managed only five hits off Don Gullett and Pedro Borbon, will try to catch up tomorrow night when Catfish Hunter pitches against Fred Norman of the Reds. It will be the first World Series game ever played on a Sunday night.

Before that game, the Yankees also will try to restore the walkie-talkie communications system they used in the American League playoffs and had planned to use today.

The Yankees introduced the system in Kansas City last Saturday, under the theory that their scouts who sit high above field level, can position the outfielders in more strategic spots for certain batters. The scouts communicate their instructions by walkie-talkie to a coach in the dugout, and other coaches then direct the fielders if necessary.

The Yankees had received permission from the commissioner's office to use the system today. But the walkie-talkies were silenced in the first inning because, the commissioner's office said, the Yankees were not following the procedure that had been approved.

Gullett and the rest of the Reds effectively silenced the Yankees on the field. And they didn't even need their 10th player, Dan Driessen, to do it.

Dan Driessen became the first National Leaguer to serve as a designated hitter in something other than an exhibition game. Under a compromise rule adopted this past summer, the rule will be used in alternate years in the Series beginning this year.

Manager Sparky Anderson, who had objected strenuously to the rule, designated Driessen to play the role, but the 25-year-old left-hander didn't contribute to his team's 10-hit attack. He went without a hit, flying out twice, popping out once and reaching first base on an error his last time at bat.

"I almost forgot to go back to the dugout in the first inning," said Driessen, the batter when Tony Perez tried to steal second and was thrown out to end the inning. "I started to take the field."

Lou Piniella, the Yankees' designate hitter, is accustomed to the role, and he was more successful with it than Driessen. Piniella led off the second inning with a double, move to third as Chris Chambliss grounded out and scored on Craig Nettles' fly to deep center field.

That run tied the game, 1-1, but it was the only run the Yankees were to score. They put their leadoff batter on base in three other innings, but twice he was erased on double plays by Nettles. The third instance led to a bit of confusion among the Yankees.

That occurred in the sixth inning. Fred Stanley led off with a walk but was forced at second as Mickey Rivers tried to hunt for a hit. Then Rivers, successful on 43 of 50 attempted steals during the season, was thrown out by Johnny Bench. It appeared to be an attempted steal.

"No, it was a hit and run," Rivers said afterward. "But the pitch to Roy [White] was high and outside. I shouldn't have gone because I knew what it was. It was a perfect pitch for him to come up throwing."

Because it was a hit and run, Rivers said, he didn't get as fast a jump as he would have if he had been trying to steal.

"When I steal," he said, "I'm going to be safe."

As it turned out, though, Rivers was the only player involved who thought it was a hit and run. Billy Martin, who signaled for the play, said it was a steal. Dick Howser, who relayed the

Dorsett Nears Record as Pitt Wins

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 16—Tony Dorsett ran 267 yards today and scored three touchdowns as unbeaten Pittsburgh routed Miami of Florida, 36-19. Dorsett's rushing yardage of 227 yards raised his career total to 5,026. He is within 151 yards of the record held by Archie Griffin.

Dorsett's scoring plays were a wide end run for 3 yards in the first period, a pass reception and run of 40 yards in the second period and a run off tackle for 53 yards in the fourth quarter. This last touchdown by Dorsett was his longest and last play of the day and his longest run since his first carry of the season, a 61-yard run against Notre Dame, Sept. 11.

Dorsett was a busy man, carrying the ball 35 times against Miami. This was his highest number of carries in a game since he lugged the ball 38 times against Northwestern as a freshman in 1973. But it was totally expected by everyone, including the Hurricanes, who could do little to prevent Dorsett from averaging 6.6 yards a carry.

The 5-foot 11-inch Pitt hero received a standing ovation from the 42,434 fans in Pitt Stadium when it was announced he had passed the 5,000-yard mark.

This was Dorsett's biggest day of the season as he zeroed in on Griffin's rushing record. Such performances have almost become the expected thing around Pittsburgh. Equally pleasing to Pitt followers and to his coaches but followers, coaches and to his teammates was the excellent work of Tom Yewcic at quarterback. This senior, who had not started a college game before and in less than 30 varsity plays in four years, had to fill in at the spot.

Pitt had lost its first-string quarterback, Robert Haygood, with a knee injury four weeks ago and then lost Matt Cavanaugh, the No. 2 signal caller, last week with a broken bone in his left leg.

Coach Johnny Majors was down to grasping at straws. He came up with a winner in Yewcic whose direction of the Panther offense was unspectacular but solid. He made no big mistakes and was particularly good in the timing of his pitch outs to Dorsett.

Yewcic also engineered a perfect screen pass for the 40-yard touchdown passplay with Dorsett. He just lobbed the ball over intruding Miami linemen to Dorsett at the line of scrimmage and Dorsett did the rest.

Pitt's defense, like Dorsett's running, was excellent and expected. It was Pitt's defense that accounted the first score. LeRoy Felder, a defensive back, tackled George Mason, Miami's starting quarterback, in the Hurricanes' end zone for a safety.

Shortly after this, Arnie Weatherington of Pitt recovered a fumble by Ken Johnson of Miami, at the Hurricanes' 31. This set up Dorsett's first touchdown.

Felder intercepted one of Mason's passes at the start of the second quarter in the Pitt end zone. The Panthers then moved from their own 20 to field-goal range and Carson Long booted PRINCETON, N.J., Oct. 16—Although they lost their leading ground gained late in the third quarter, the Colgate Red Raiders scored two touchdowns by Bruce Halvarty in the final 12 minutes and defeated Princeton, 17-7, at Palmer Stadium today. The victory was Colgate's fifth straight this season.

Pat Healy, who had gained 423 yards in Colgate's first four triumphs, had to leave the game with a leg injury 37 minutes before the end of the third quarter, only a minute after his fumble on the Colgate 14-yard line had led to Princeton's only touchdown.

Henry Howarth of Princeton recovered the fumble and three plays later Bobby Ison dived 1 yard over the Colgate goal line, putting Princeton ahead 7-3. Ison, who had missed the last five games with an ankle injury, gained 3 yards on 17 carries for the day.

When Healy was injured while turning the next Princeton kickoff, his place at fullback was filled by Steve Verity, a 5-foot 10-inch sophomore from St. Francis Prep in Queens, N.J. Verity had only carried the ball three times for five yards before today game.

Texasan's Kick Sets Record

COLLEGE STATION, Tex., Oct. 16 (UPI)—Texas A. & M.'s barefoot kicker, Tony Franklin, booted a 64-yard field goal today. It was the longest field goal ever by a college player.

Franklin, a sophomore from Fort Worth, surpassed by 1 yard the year-old collegiate record held by Colorado State's Clark Kemble.

Franklin's record-setting kick came in the second quarter of the A.M. Baylor game and was aided by a 1-mile-an-hour wind. His longest kick last year was 59 yards.

Franklin kicks with the side of his foot and does not wear a sock on his kicking foot. The temperature during today's game was in the low 50's.

To Willis, With Respect and Admiration

By BILL BRADLEY

On Thursday night, Willis Reed's jersey No. 19 will be retired during a pregame ceremony at Madison Square Garden. The gesture is entirely appropriate. No other Knick has been honored similarly.

Willis Reed was the dominant member of the Knick team that won two world championships, and in 1970 he was the most valuable player in the National Basketball Association. He combined power and mobility, playing the pivot with surprising inventiveness. Other centers were stronger and a few were quicker, but at some point in the game, Willis would find and exploit the weak spot in his opponent's style. Against 7-footers, he went outside where he shot with a feather touch. A series of quick fakes followed by a soft jump shot were his most effective tools against men of his own size. If, after a switch, he found himself with a smaller forward or a guard, he simply turned and overpowered him.

The move I liked best came after he had his several jumpers moving to his left. He would turn with the same motion in the same place, as if to shoot, but this time he would only show the ball. Then he would cross his left leg in front of his right, take a big step to put himself on the opposite side of the basket, stretch his left arm out and flip a reverse layup against the glass.

The Perfect Center

He was the perfect center for our team. He set the best screen in the league. On defense he sacrificed himself constantly, leaving his man open for the brief seconds necessary to stop opponents driving to the basket. After an opposing guard had his shot blocked, or collided with Willis, he usually gave up trying to reach the basket, choosing instead the safety of 20-foot jump shots. When called upon, Willis could score, though he rarely forced shots. Above all, Willis was an extraordinary rebounder. He had good timing and a sense of where the ball would bounce. If someone tried to block him from a rebound, Willis usually delivered an elbow to the sternum with an audible impact. When he got his hands on the ball, no one took it away.

Willis was also the captain and leader of the Knicks. The role seemed natural for him and he was accepted by everyone. He was always the one to speak up when Coach Red Holzman asked if anyone had something to add, and when Red was absent, Willis would sometimes speak to the team alone. Holzman was the "boss," Willis was the "player boss," yet he kept enough distance from management to maintain his integrity in the team's eyes. He also acted as a counselor, talking individually with a depressed or angry player. His dominance came in part with his position: A team is as strong only as its big man. A center has to fight for his teammates, or more specifically, has to make the opponent believe he will fight. Willis never had trouble convincing anyone.

Framed in Stainless

At 6 feet 9 inches Willis played at 240 pounds. A close-cropped Afro framed his face and stainless to his scarred eyebrows and wrinkled forehead. His lips often parted to reveal an engaging smile. When he grimaced, the lips pinched together and his usually gentle brown eyes narrowed until they were fiery slits.

"His acts of courage and determination to the team give him a singular place in New York sports history..."

On a hot night in the Garden, when his muscles and skin glistened in the spotlight, there was something startlingly elemental about him. It was as if every pore opened and Willis cleansed himself mightily with his effort. I always felt better for being a part of his effort.

Born an only child on his grandfather's 200-acre farm 10 miles east of Bernice, La., Willis knew hard work early. He grew up a country person in the strongest positive sense. Grandparents on both sides of his family were rural Baptists and never touched liquor and preached hard work and self-discipline.

After living with the 11 relatives who worked the farm, his parents moved to Bernice, where his father worked for the Lindsey Sawmill Company. As a kid of 9 Willis would get up at 4 A.M. to go fishing on the stream that crossed his grandfather's property. Sometimes he would sneak out his grandfather's shotgun to hunt birds.

When he was 12 Willis was picking 210 pounds of cotton a day at $3.25 per hundredweight. He picked watermelons. He hauled hay. At 13 he was "cutting those people's grass" in the white section of Bernice. He saw that all the merchants and gasoline dealers were white, but he did not allow himself to hate. A strong home and good teachers gave him his preparation for life.

"My mother and father didn't care what I chose for a career, but they wanted me to be a good human being," he said. "If that meant hauling hay, well, it was no disgrace."

Determination and Pride

It was this same determination and pride that gave Willis the strength to come back from injury. Early in his career he had a severely strained shoulder and bone chips removed from his ankle. Tendinitis in his left ankle obliterated two seasons, 1970-71 and 1971-72, during which he played in 30 and 13 games, respectively. Then, in 1973 on the same Los Angeles court that six months earlier he had left as world champion, Willis tore a cartilage in his right knee. Finally, in 1974, after suffering pain behind his knees throughout the season, it became apparent that he might have to undergo another operation.

The chance of total recovery was slim and the chance of reinjury causing permanent damage was high. Rather than endure another operation-rehabilitation, Willis, with the Garden's agreement, chose retirement.

When Willis stands before the crowd again Thursday night, I wonder about his thoughts. His days as a Knick differ from those of Dave DeBusschere or Dick Barnett, Walt Frazier or Earl Monroe. During his career he experienced extremes that eluded the rest of us.

Willis cannot hunt for a day or take a long walk without being reminded by the pain in his leg that he was the inspirational leader of the Knicks. He was the man who struggled with serious injury for four years. He was the man who played in the seventh game of the 1970 world championship with a leg shot full of Novocain.

His acts of courage and dedication to the team give him a singular place in New York sports history, a place that in some ways seems above the gesture of retiring a uniform. But the pain in his leg reminds him and all of us that sports heroes are human and that the traditional act taken by his old employer in the presence of his fans and teammates is, after all, a way of saying thank you to a human being who has enriched all of our lives by his efforts.

Bill Bradley is playing his 10th season of forward for the New York Knickerbockers.

Tilden and Tennis: The Lonely Ruler

Bill Tilden may have been the greatest tennis player ever. He certainly was one of the most colorful and controversial. This look at a man is excerpted from "Big Bill Tilden," a new book by Frank Deford ($8.95) © 1975, 1976 by Frank Deford. Reprinted by permission of Scribner, Inc.

By FRANK DEFORD

Playing for himself, for his dignity, for posterity, Big Bill Tilden was invincible. No man ever bestrode his sport as Tilden did for those years. It was not just that he could not be beaten, it was nearly as if he had invented the sport he conquered.

Babe Ruth, Jack Dempsey, Red Grange and the other fabled American sweat lords of the times stood at the head of more popular games, but Tilden simply was tennis in the public mind: Tilden and tennis. It was said in that order. He ruled the game as much by force of his curious, controversial, often abrasive personality as by his proficiency, but he was not merely eccentric. He was the greatest irony in sport: a game that then suffered a "fairy" reputation, Tilden gave a lithe, swashbuckling, athletic image—although he was in fact a homosexual, the only great male athlete we know to have been one.

Dogged by Loneliness

Alone in the world of athletics, nearly friendless and, it seems, even ashamed of himself, there was seldom any joy for the man, even amidst his greatest tennis triumphs. It's quite likely that in his whole life Tilden never spent a night alone with an adult, man or woman. And his every day was shadowed by the bizarre and melancholy circumstances surrounding a childhood he tried to forget; certainly it is no coincidence that he did not blossom as a champion until just after he discarded the name of his youth.

He had been born on Feb. 10, 1893, and christened William Tatem Tilden Jr., which he came to hate because everyone called him Junior or June. Finally, arbitrarily, around the time of his 25th birthday, he changed the Junior to the Second (II). That once officially disposed of, June became Bill and then, even better, Big Bill.

The first clear vision of him as a player arises when Tilden was playing, with little distinction, for the team at his small private school, Germantown Academy. This day he was struggling on the court, slugging everything, all cannonballs, when Frank Deacon, one of his younger friends, came by.

Even then, as a schoolboy, Tilden was always closest to children younger than he. At the end of a point, which, typically, Tilden had violently overplayed, hitting way out, Deacon hollered to him in encouragement, "Hey, June, take it easy."

Tilden stopped dead, and with what became a characteristic gesture he swirled to face the boy, placing his hands on his hips and glaring at him. "Deacon," he snapped, "I'll play my own sweet game."

The Court Was His Stage

And so he did, every day of his life. He was the proudest of men and the saddest, pitifully alone and shy, but never so happy as when he brought his armful of rackets into the limelight or walked into a crowded room and contentiously took it over.

George Lott, a Davis Cup colleague and a man who actively disliked Tilden, nonetheless this mesmerized by him:

"When he came into the room it was like a bolt of electricity hit the place. Immediately, there was a feeling of awe, as though you were in the presence of royalty. You knew you were in contact with greatness, even if only remotely. The atmosphere became charged and there was almost a sensation of lightness when he left. You felt completely dominated and breathed a sigh of relief for not having wanted an opinion of my sort."

When he was king, he would often appear to trap himself in defeat so that he could play the better role, prolonging the afternoon as the cynosure in the sun, prancing and staking upon his chalked stage, staring at officials, fuming at the crowd, now toying with his opponent, then saluting him grandly, spinning, floating, jumping, playing his own sweet game, reveling in the game.

And if inspired or smudged enough at the crowd or at his rival, he would serve out the match by somehow holding five balls in one huge hand and then tossing four of them up, one after another, and pounding out four cannonball aces—bam, bam, bam, bam!—30-40—game—then throwing the fifth ball away with disdain. That was the style to it. Only the consummate showman would think of the extra ball as the closing flourish to the act.

"He is an artist," Franklin P. Adams wrote of Big Bill's peak. "He is more of an artist than nine-tenths of the artists I know. It is the beauty of the game that Tilden loves, it is the chase always, rather than the quarry."

Sports Editor's Mailbox: The Interminable Season

To the Sports Editor:

The 20th anniversary of Don Larsen's perfect game on Oct. 8 should have given pause to baseball fans. On the same date that the fifth game of the 1956 World Series was played, the 1976 playoffs had not even begun. What further evidence is needed that the baseball season has become too long?

The longer season is the direct result of expansion, which led to a 162-game season, divisional play and championship playoffs. The situation has become aggravated by the introduction of night World Series games, which guarantee wintry playing conditions in almost all major league cities.

The coming American League expansion to 14 teams offers an opportunity to restore a normal baseball calendar. If each team played nine games against the seven teams in the other division, and 15 games against the six teams in its own division, the American League season could be shortened to 163 games.

The National League, which is not expanding, could reduce its schedule to 166 games by eliminating one game against each of the six teams in the other division. The three extra games could easily be made up during the course of the season, and the imbalance would be short-lived since the National League undoubtedly will expand in another year or two.

There may be other and better methods of accomplishing a shorter schedule, but it seems clear that with another expansion imminent, now is the time to do it.

Hunter Is Truly Heroic When Occasion Demands

To the Sports Editor:

Catfish Hunter may have had a mediocre season by comparison with his superlative records of recent years. However, he has already shown his brilliance during the playoff and will continue to do so during the World Series.

Those who question his invincibility and scoff at the astronomical sums the Yankees shelled out to obtain his services need be reminded of the fact that Catfish, like all mortals, cannot achieve perfection in all pursuits and that life inevitably has its ups and downs. The allure of the Hunter mystique is that he does rise to the occasion more often than not, and when the chips are down and the stakes are high, he is unparal.

Take heart, Catfish, you will always be the hero of those who have outgrown the exploits of the mythological Superman and are not yet old enough to give up their infatuation with the superman concept.

Coast Tracks Urged To Emulate New York

To the Sports Editor:

Jimmy Kilroe's article, "Where the Big Races Are: Should All of Them Be in New York?" (Oct. 10), is all sour grapes. As any smart bettor knows, it is just as important how you bet as whom you bet.

Instead of putting up $350,000, as Mr. Kilroe and Santa Anita have done, for one race called "The Championship" (which, incidentally, was a dud last year with no real champions), a smarter idea might be to add another $100,000 or so and set up a fall championship series similar to the one the New York Racing Association has at Belmont Park, and make each race increasing in purse commensurate with an increase in distance.

There could even exist the possibility of a showdown with the best of the West meeting the best of the East for one major stakes race (not on Nov. 6, Mr. Kilroe — the Washington D.C. International is on that day), possibly as a winter-take-all affair. In that way maybe national racing could be given a nod, or at least it would be taking a "stride" in the right direction.

At Hampshire the Players Are in Charge

By JAY EVANS

I am responding to Marion Lane Rogers's excellent article of Sept. 12 on this page entitled "Put the Players in Charge."

Mrs. Rogers suggests that in collegiate sports the players assume complete responsibility on the playing field. Player Control, as she calls it, will give the student participant a commanding slice of the action. She says the first step toward making athletics an integral part of the educational process is to "give the game back to the students."

In conclusion, Mrs. Rogers asks for a response, for a reply from the nation's colleges to her idea.

Small, private, innovative Hampshire College, in Amherst, Mass., part of the Five College Consortium (Amherst, Hampshire, Smith, Mount Holyoke and the University of Massachusetts), built in Bob Stiles's apple orchard just six years ago in the Pioneer Valley of Massachusetts, is pleased to respond.

From an original group of 200 entering students in 1970, Hampshire College has reached its planned goal of a total population of 1,280 students — half male, half female.

Tradition Is Too Costly

When Hampshire College enrolled its first students, it somehow didn't seem right to embark along the traditional road of intercollegiate sports. It would amount to an inordinate quantity of money to serve a relatively small segment (mostly male) of the student body. And would serve only those physically fortunate students who would need it the least.

The vast majority of students would wind up being spectators. Valuable scholarship money would be siphoned off to entice athletes to attend. A mushrooming bureaucracy of coaches, assistants, trainers, ticket agents, business managers, team physicians, publicity directors, ushers, cheerleaders, etc., would make alarming inroads into the college budget.

Mrs. Rogers, in her article, mentions the need for college educators to show courage in adopting her concept of giving sports back to the students.

Hampshire College educators had the courage to take that first step along what the poet Robert Frost called "the road less traveled by." Hampshire put athletics and sports back into the hands of its students.

Since its first class appeared at the gates of the orchard, not one student has been recruited for athletic skill, not one person has been earmarked for an athletic scholarship, not one coach has been hired, nor has any of the paraphernalia normally associated with traditional spectator-oriented sports been obtained.

What has emerged is interesting. The Hampshire Ice Hockey Association was founded by students and has been run by students, and it is looking forward to its fourth season and expects to play 10 to 15 games this winter. The Hampshire Ultimate Frisbee Club, an entirely autonomous organization of students, is the second-ranked frisbee team in the nation, behind Rutgers University. Other student-run activities include soccer, tennis, basketball, trampolines, volleyball, horseback riding, golf and sailing.

Takes Only 1% of School's Budget

Hampshire College provides only the barest minimum of financial support. Would you believe an athletic travel budget for all sports of $180 for the entire academic year? Less than 1 percent of the total college budget is spent on recreation and athletics.

Only in the more individual sports such as rock climbing, kayaking and the martial arts has Hampshire provided instruction (not coaching).

The transition from the traditional approach to sports that most students are accustomed to is not easy. Instead of simply reporting for practice and doing what he or she is told, Hampshire students take athletics into their own hands. A sign-up sheet appears on the bulletin board, an organizational meeting is held and those students who really care about soccer/frisbee/volleyball/golf/etc. get together and work out their own destiny.

Mrs. Rogers will be pleased to know that at least one college has "Put the Players in Charge," and it works.

Jay Evans is director of recreational athletics at Hampshire College. He was coach of the United States Olympic whitewater kayak team in 1972.

Yankees-Reds Scoring

Inning	Yankees	Reds	Scoring Play
1	0	1	With two out, Morgan hit a home run.
2	1	1	Piniella doubled to right, took third as Chambliss grounded out. Morgan to Perez, and scored on Nettles' fly to Geronimo.
3	1	1	With one out, Concepcion tripled to left-center and scored on Rose's fly to Rivers.
4	1	0	Rose walked and was forced by Griffey, who stole second as Morgan struck out on a 3-2 pitch. Perez singled to left scoring Griffey.
5	1	0	Foster singled to left and scored as Bench tripled to right. Lyle replaced Alexander. Bench scored on a wild pitch.

sign from his third-base coaching position, said it was a steal. White said it was a steal.

Could Have Cost Run

"I had the option to swing if I had a good pitch to hit," White said, "but it was up and away." The mistake by Rivers that could have been an important one for the Yankees, because after he was thrown out White hit a fly ball to left-center field that Cesar Geronimo dropped for a two-base error. Thurman Munson then lined a single to right, but Howser held White at third because Ken Griffey charged the ball quickly and threw it home before White could have arrived at the plate.

The Yankees didn't score, however, because Piniella hit a looping liner to Morgan at second for the last out.

Perez Has 3 Hits

At that point, the Reds lead by only 2-1. They scored their second run against Doyle Alexander in the third when Dave Concepcion lined a triple to left-center and scored on Pete Rose's fly to center.

But then they added another run in their half of the sixth and punched across two in the seventh as they chased Alexander from the game.

In the sixth, Rose walked and Griffey forced him at second. Griffey then stole second and scored when Perez lined a single to left for his third straight hit. In last year's World Series against Boston, Perez failed to hit in his first 15 times at bat.

George Foster, a contender for the National League's most valuable-player award, led off the seventh with a single and came home on Bench's fly ball that caromed off the right-field wall and skipped past Elliott Maddox for a triple.

Martin replaced Alexander with Sparky Lyle at that moment, but Lyle's second pitch was wild, enabling Bench to score the fifth run.

"I was only so-so, no more than so-so," said Alexander, who was something of a surprise choice to start the first game for the Yankees after he hadn't pitched in three weeks. Because of the layoff, I got behind on some batters, but I'm confident now that we can win. If you make this club score runs one at a time, you can beat them."

History With an Asterisk

CINCINNATI, Oct. 16—Living baseball history was written in its-bitsy characters in hundreds of scorebooks this crisp and sunny afternoon when, for the first time since Cadet Abner Doubleday put Farmer Phinney's cow pasture to unnatural use, two 10-man teams met in competition for the championship of the universe. The time was 1:26 P.M.

Sports and the Cincinnati Reds were leading the first game of the World Series, 1-0, when Lou Piniella won his special place in the annals of the New York Yankees. Leading off the second inning, he became the first designated hitter to go to bat in interleague play.

Like Roger Maris' record of 61 home runs in 1961, Piniella's memorable performance must be recorded with an asterisk because he wasn't the first designated hitter to carry a Louisville Slugger to the plate. In this game Don Driessen, playing dh for Cincinnati, had gone up in the first inning, but hadn't got an official time at bat because while he was there Tony Perez was stealing, retiring the side.

The 10-man lineups weren't the only unusual features of the entertainment. Stranger still was the spectacle of a championship game starting at 1 P.M. and proceeding in sunshine. The baseball hierarchy is dedicated to the proposition that the World Series is a television spectacle to be presented at prime time, but these matters are controlled by a power higher than Bowie Kuhn.

The higher power, whose corporate name is National Broadcasting Company, scheduled the opener for Saturday afternoon because it has no regular sports attraction like college football in that time slot. Tomorrow afternoon NBC will be busy telecasting pro football, so the second game will be shown at night, when Kojak offers less formidable competition than O. J. Simpson. Seasonable weather is forecast, meaning an evening too cold for the players and too cold for fans.

Big Mean Machine

Before the game, a man with a microphone asked Pete Rose: "Does the Yankee legend worry you?"

"No," said the world champions' third baseman, who has been engaged in postseason play in five of the last seven years. "No, because we think we have a legend here in Cincinnati. Does it worry them?"

As it turned out, the legend of Yankee invincibility began to look a trifle dog-eared in the first inning, when Joe Morgan pumped a home run into the seats in right to give the Reds a lead of 1-0. The Yankees got that run back in the second inning, Cincinnati regained an edge in the third and about half an hour later the Big Mean Red Machine began to whir in earnest.

When the seventh inning ended, the home guard was comfortable with a 5-1 margin and the Reds' 10 hits included two triples and two doubles in addition to Morgan's home run. Both starting pitchers were gone, and there was a chance that neither would ever play again in the garments he wore today.

Doyle Alexander, who pitched and lost for the Yankees, and Don Gullett, whose eighth World Series appearance produced his second World Series victory, both played out the season without a contract. It is conceivable that if the Reds conclude this business in three more games, Gullett and Alexander may not work again before they become free agents. After that, the question of their future employment will be handled by Jerry Kapstein, the demon negotiator who has a stable of free agents.

Gullett had a four-hitter going when he twisted an ankle pitching to the leadoff batter in the eighth inning. He stayed in long enough to give up one more single, then limped into the trainer's room. Gullett has been a Cincinnati employee throughout his professional life. Alexander, whom the Yankees got from Baltimore in a 10-player deal last June, started as a pitcher with the Los Angeles Dodgers and was shipped east in a trade from Frank Robinson in 1971. His first World Series appearance ended in the seventh inning at the suggestion of Billy Martin.

Billy's Spies

Neither Martin, the licensed wonder-worker of the New York delegation, nor Sparky Anderson, the Reds' presiding intellectual, expressed any gratification with the day's developments. Martin was bitter because spies with walke-talkies, whom he had stationed in a broadcasting booth upstairs, had been apprehended and relieved of their electronic toys.

The walke-talkies were the brainchildren of George Steinbranner, the Yankees' deep-thinking owner. On his instructions, coaches were wired for sound late in the season and sent upstairs, where they could survey the placement of the New York defense and advise the bench to shift the left fielder a step and a half to his right. Martin had got Anderson's consent and Bowie Kuhn's permission to use this message system today, but after one inning gumshoes from the commissioner's office moved in.

The affair took on the complexion of a Central Intelligence Agency incident. Martin said he had been jobbed. Kuhn said the spies had violated terms of the agreement by watching from the press box level instead of an ordinary seat in the upper deck. Sparky said he was here to play a World Series, not to answer "petty" questions about walke-talkies.

He said that he didn't think this had been much of a ball game, that he had hoped the Reds would be more aggressive than they were, and that he hoped they would get tougher, starting tomorrow. He was asked whether his first experience as leader of a 10-man had altered his opinion of the dh rule.

"Yes," he said. "Instead of being bad, it stinks."

Stadium Scenes: Like Old Times, Happy Lines

After 12 years of frustration, Yankee fans got their chance yesterday to buy World Series tickets, right. Even before their team had lost the opening game in Cincinnati, the New Yorkers had scooped up the 5,500 available bleacher seats (at $4 each) and this is what it was like.

In 1960, Martin Put Pur Into the Cincinnati Line

Special to The New York Times

CINCINNATI, Oct. 16—Billy Martin, the Yankees' manager, played for the Cincinnati Reds in 1960 and someone asked him before today's game what he remembered from that season.

"Jim Brewer," Martin said. "And $22,000."

Martin referred to the celebrated one-punch fight he had with Brewer of the Chicago Cubs. He wound up paying Brewer $22,000 in a lawsuit.

"The day before it happened," the manager recalled, "they knocked me down quite a bit. That day, Darrel Johnson, who was in the stands, told me to look out: They were going to throw at me."

Pitch Behind His Head

"My first time up, Brewer threw a pitch behind my head. On the second pitch I swung and my bat went flying toward first base. When I went to get it, Brewer called me a little dago, and as soon as he said that, I hit him."

Martin recalled another fight he had that year, with Gene Conley, the Philadelphia Phillies' 6-foot-8-inch pitcher.

"He's the tallest man I ever hit," Martin said. "I had to jump up to hit him."

Bobby Cox, the capable manager of the Yankees' Syracuse farm club, has been mentioned as a possible candidate for the manager's job in Pittsburgh. The Pirates were said to be inter-

ANNAPOLIS, Oct. 16 — He ap- in the Yankees' dugout today at in one hand and a cigarette other. Yogi Berra was in the series again, his 18th — 14 as ee player, one as a Yankee r, one as a Met's coach, one ets' manager and now as a coach. As he waddled toward the far end of the dugout, Sparky An- dersen, the Reds' manager, came over and visited with him. Moments later, his discarded, Yogi Berra was toward the batting cage by Perez hugged him. "See, the Reds' first baseman y man Yo-gee," far away, Catfish Hunter and said. "Yogi's in the ries any way it goes." Soon teddy bear with No. "3" on uniform was visiting with bench. "I'll get my driver," Yogi said. "I've got it now." Bench said. "I'd like to have it to play because you're his idol." "I'm the driver," Yogi said, "When Ellis, once their tor- on the Pittsburgh Pirates start Tuesday night's third e heckled them from the he Reds had reacted angrily, annoyed that Ellis, in his "Dock Ellis in the Country all," gloated about drugging Joe Morgan and Danny in succession with pitches got that ball in my hand," shouting. "You had it today," Morgan "You went over to that d became a star. Over here e nothing." "What're you now, a sinker-slider?" "ol' spitball," Ellis said. "Yogi Berra had the Reds Yogi Berra might be the coach. As a manager, he was of not being able to "com- with players, but as a is described by Billy Martin.

Yogi the Coach

Yogi Berra "You still get my driver"

as "my morning newspaper, he tells me how this guy or that is feeling as soon as I walk in the clubhouse." With his cuddly nature, Yogi Berra can be loved as a coach. Managers can't be loved. "With a manager," Martin says, "there is always that barrier, but as a coach, Yogi communicates great. The players love him. He's a very solid balance." Yogi Berra is also the link to three decades of Yankee glory. When the Yankees weren't glorious in recent years, he was the missing link. He was with the Mets during their glory years. But now, with the Yankees in the World Series again, he is the link to the Yankees of Mickey Mantle and before that to the Yankees of Joe DiMaggio. "This club is looser than those clubs were," Yogi says. "We had some lose guys—Mantle and Ford, they had their drinks like everybody else. So did I, and before that Johnny Lindell was a rowdy and Billy Johnson was the agitator. But on this club, almost everybody is an agitator. Everybody is on everybody else." Of the current Yankee players, Thurman Munson is the most scrutinized by Yogi Berra, a Hall of Fame catcher.

"I hit more home runs than him, but Munson's a helluva player," Yogi says. "But as a catcher, I'd like to see him throw the ball better. I keep telling him to stand up when he throws, not to throw side arm from a crouch like he does sometimes. That's when he throws wild. I tell him, 'You're not going to get anybody that way anyway, so stand up and throw.' But he's a helluva player.

"Chris Chambliss is different from the first basemen we had. They usually pulled the ball. He hits it every-where.

"Willie Randolph, he reminds of Jerry Coleman the way he gets rid of the ball so quick. He's really gonna be somethin'.

"Fred Stanley isn't like the short-stops we had," Yogi says, meaning Tony Kubek and Phil Rizzuto, "but he's steady.

Nettles and Boyer

"Craig Nettles is great. I never knew he could play third base that good until I saw him this year. Some guys, if they don't hit, the whole thing goes. But when he wasn't hitting, he was playing third like Clete Boyer did. And when he started hitting, he led the league in homers.

"Roy White is a good steady ball-player.

"Mickey Rivers can outrun the ball in center field, the way Mick could. I'd like to have three like him in the outfield. And he's not a bad hitter either.

"Lou Piniella, Oscar Gamble, Elliott Maddox, Carlos May, they do a good job.

"Of the pitchers, Catfish is like Vic Raschi was, not much of a breaking ball but he pitches in spots with his fastball. Ellis is like Johnny Kucks was, a good sinker. But we never had anybody like Ed Figueroa, sneaky motion. Doyle Alexander is a control pitcher, a right-handed Eddie Lopat. He changes speeds. Dick Tidrow reminds me of Pete Mikkelsen, but Sparky Lyle is in a class by himself with his sliderball. We never had anybody like him. Luis Arroyo threw a screwball and Joe Page and Ryne Duren had fastballs."

And today Yogi Berra was back where he belonged—in the World Series.

"The thing I like best about it," he said, "is knowin' you're in it."

Palmer Ties For Lead in Paris Golf

PARIS, Oct. 16 (AP)—Arnold Palmer, a 47-year-old aging American master, and Severiano Ballesteros, Spain's 19-year-old prodigy, put on closing rushes today to share the third-round lead in the Lancome Trophy golf tournament at 214, two under par. Ballesteros birdied three of the last four holes over the 6,875-yard St. Nom La Breteche course for a four-under-par 68. Palmer dropped birdies at two of the last three holes for a 69 in the sunny, but cool fall weather.

David Graham of Australia posted a 70 for a 215 total and third place. Gary Player of South Africa, who had shared the second-round lead with Palmer, Graham and Jean Garraide of France, needed birdies at the last two holes for a 70 that left him in fourth place with 216.

Garraide slipped to a 74 that left him tied for fifth at 219 with Lee Elder of the United States and Tony Jacklin of Britain. Roy Floyd, the United States Masters champion, was last in the eight-man invitation field at 224.

Britain-Ireland Golf Victor

PENINA, Portugal, Oct. 16 (UPI)—Britain-Ireland won the 10th world amateur golf championship today by shooting a 16-over-par 892 aggregate to defeat Japan by two strokes. Australia was third at 897, followed by Taiwan with 898 and the defending champion United States team fifth at 902.

The United States had been bidding for its fifth consecutive amateur team championship, but failed to mount a serious challenge until late in the tournament. The Americans were only two shots back of the winner going into the final round.

"It's good for one country not to win all the time," said Phil Strubing.

Only the top three scores from each of the 38 foursomes counted toward the final team total in the event played at the par-73, 6,940-yard Penina Golf Course in Portugal's Southern Algarve Province.

It was the first British-Irish victory since 1964 and ended an American victory skein that had stretched eight years over the previous four events.

The Americans also won in 1960 and 1962 and the Australians have won it twice, the first time the tournament was held in 1958 and again in 1966. Ian Hutcheon of the British-Irish team had the lowest score of the day with a two-under-par 71.

Bean Ties for Golf Lead

NAGOYA, Japan, Oct. 16 (AP)—Andy Bean of the United States carded four birdies and an eagle for a six-under-par 66 today to tie Kazuo Yoshikawa of Japan for the lead after three rounds of the $150,000 Tokai golf classic.

The 22-year-old Bean had a three-round total of 212, four under par. Yoshikawa, the second-round leader, had a 71 today for his 212.

Redskins' Cornerback Helps Bat Down Stigma of Contact Lens in Contact Sport

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

When Alex Karras, the peerless Monday night broadcaster, was with the Detroit Lions, so poor was his eyesight that he played largely by feel. The position, defensive tackle, lent itself to groping and Karras claimed he sorted people out until he found the football and the quarterback who came with it. He would not wear contact lenses. There are fewer Karras around as the use of contact lenses in the National Football League widens. A casual head count last summer produced 50 users, split about half and half between hard lenses and soft. The latter costing up to $400, set on the eyeball like a suction cup and do not pop out no matter how hard the jolt.

Pat Fischer

The hard lenses do pop out. But, unlike basketball, where play stops and everyone bends over to help find the lost lens, the play goes on in football. Several teams carry spares and some of them even pay for replacements, the going price for hard lenses being $150-$200.

Pat Fischer, the remarkable cornerback for the Washington Redskins, considers his soft contact lenses to be indispensable. "I would not more play without them than without my helmet or shoulder pads," he said the other day. Fischer has an acute astigmatism in his right eye that his contact lens does not correct entirely. "But at least I can see something."

they are performing poorly. They worry about the hands, the feet, the stance, but not what goes on in the head. Good eyesight is basic. It deals with concentration. For years leading athletes spurned the use of contact lenses. Some still do. It's an ego thing.

The cornerback on the other side of the Redskins secondary defense is Joe Lavender. He wears tinted, corrected eyeglasses (his "shades") underneath his helmet. "He's one of those people who just can't stand contact lenses," said Fischer.

Eyes Are Closed

Since a football, a prolate spheroid 11 inches long with a maximum circumference of 28 inches, is not small, why is good sight so essential? "Timing," said Fischer, who is only 5 feet 9 inches and 170 pounds, has been a coveted cornerback for years. "I have to know exactly where that ball is at the time, right down to a fraction of an inch."

Another is Chuck Muncie of the New Orleans Saints. He is a running back who takes his hit on almost every play, and in a preseason game against Cincinnati his plastic framed glasses were broken three times. Hank Stram, the coach, thought about putting Muncie in goggles like World War I pilots, but he has not done that.

At the right time and place, Fischer will leap and knock the ball from the hands of Harold Carmichael, the Eagles' 6-8 wide receiver. It is pro football's No. 1 David and Goliath matchup.

Finally because of his handicap, Fischer is deeply appreciative of any aid to sight. Not all athletes are, according to Dr. William Harrison, who heads the Vision Center for Sports in Laguna Niguel, Calif.

Goggles? Raymond Berry, the Hall of Fame receiver for the old Baltimore Colts, wore goggles when he played in the Los Angeles Coliseum, all the better to see the football against the bright sun setting over the edge of the stadium. Berry was also, to the best of memory, the first player to wear contact lenses, two decades ago, and no one had stronger concentration than Raymond.

Dr. Harrison, an optometrist, says: "Most athletes are not aware of why their spread formation, the shotgun, in today's game against the Cardinals in St. Louis, which opened at 4 P.M. in New York. There is no deception to it but rather a deliberate move. "They [the defense] already know we'll pass from it 95 percent of the time and that it's third down and more than five yards to go," says Roger Staubach, the Dallas quarterback, who is enjoying his most productive passing year.

"The advantage is that gives me more time to see the field, and since the receivers are up closer to the line of scrimmage, they can put more pressure on the defense. We've hurt teams more from the spread than from regular dropback passing formations."

Tomorrow night, when he jets visit New England, it will be interesting to note if the New York team chooses to attack the Patriots' four-linebacker defense with the same tactics Detroit used so effectively last Sunday.

Ken Ship, who was the Jets' head coach last year after Charlie Winner was dismissed, is now an assistant for the Lions. With a new head coach, Tommy Hudspeth, coming in Ship had the game-plan responsibility. He split out two tight ends, Charlie Sanders and David Hill, which in turn forced the Patriots to spread their four ferocious linebackers—the three Steves, King, Nelson and Zabel, plus Sam Hunt. That gave the Lions running room and their offense moved to an upset.

The holding-penalty controversy goes on and the Rams now suggest that they are being picked on unfairly by league officials. John Vella, a tackle for the Raiders, who are supposedly the worst offenders, says any offensive lineman can be called for holding on any play. "It's like Russian roulette. You wonder when your number is coming up."

It also is a matter of different techniques and the offensive linemen are searching for an edge. Vella's teammate, Art Shell, cites Wilbur Young, the 6-6, 285-pound defensive end for Kansas City who plays opposite Shell. "Wilbur throws his arm up into you armpit and uses it as leverage to get around you," said Shell. "You either have to clamp down on the arm, which looks like holding, or let him go."

Chuck Foreman, hard running Minnesota Vikings back

Giants' Problems Today: Foreman and Tarkenton

By MICHAEL KATZ

BLOOMINGTON, Minn., Oct. 16—Playing in the shadow of Fran Tarkenton and the Purple People Eaters in the proximity of Minneapolis and St. Paul, which is pretty close to obscurity anyway, Chuck Foreman is trying hard.

Foreman, who could well be the best back and most underrated "superstar" in the National Football League, still thinks that the man from Hertz, O. J. Simpson, is No. 1.

But the Minnesota Vikings' pivoting quarterback, whose last endorsement was for a local television store last year, believes he'll show the Giants tomorrow why he's at least No. 2.

Giants fans back in the New Jersey metropolitan area, who are interested in seeing whether 37-year-old Norm Streed can turn around a 0-5 start might be better advised to keep their eyes (Channel 2, 2 P.M. Eastern Daylight Time) on Foreman. Unless the Giants upset a 10-point line against the undefeated (four victories, one tie) Vikings, interest can be maintained solely by watching the 6-foot-2-inch, 207-pound Foreman perform his balancing acts.

Also, the Purple People Eaters. The Vikings are a three-ring circus. First, there's Tarkenton, the leading passer in N.F.L. history and the only quarterback who has ever beaten the Vikings (before being traded back to Minnesota). Second, there are the Purple People Eaters, the great old defensive line of Jim Marshall (38 years old), Carl Eller (34), Alan Page (31) and the 28-year-old "kid," Dong Sutherland.

Lou Holtz

Then there's Foreman, who in his third N.F.L. season last year, rushed for 1,070 yards, caught 73 passes, the most in the league and a record for running backs, and scored 22 touchdowns, which would have been a record except Simpson scored 23. But Foreman's statistics are better than Simpson's so far this year: 389 yards rushing, third best in the conference; 16 receptions, although none in the last two games as he has been double-teamed, an unusual honor for a back, and a league-leading seven touchdowns. He also blocks well.

"O. J. is still No. 1," says Foreman, "but I don't put anybody else ahead of me, not Franco Harris, not Lydell Mitchell, not anybody. I'm not saying I'm better than these guys, just that they're not better than me. There's nothing I'm not capable of doing."

Hurries to Get Warm

Being so modestly good—and Foreman is so shy he used to change his telephone number two or three times a season—has gotten him cold winters in Minnesota. "You don't ever get used to it," says Foreman, who grew up in Frederick, Md., went to the University of Miami and now lives in Florida. "The day after the season ends, I'm gone."

Minnesota is "beautiful," Foreman says, but it hasn't been good for business. "I really don't get that much publicity," he says, "and I should be doing a lot more endorsements, I guess. But I don't mind that much."

"I really thought about playing in New York before the draft. The endorsements would probably be a lot better. I thought I was going to be drafted by the Jets because I played for Weeb Ewbank in the Senior Bowl that year."

"I had a big hangup about New York, though. I mean, New York is New York and I'm a country boy. I was there six, seven times before I started to really like it."

"Burgess Owens of the Jets is a friend of mine and he's shown me around the jazz joints in the 'Village.' Yeah, New York's not as bad as I thought."

Vikings Get the First Choice

Foreman is a very good reason why Owens is a Jet. After the 1972 season, in which the Vikings and Jets each had 7-7 won-lost records, Minnesota won a coin toss for the right to choose first in the college draft and, picking 12th on the first round, took the wide receiver from Miami with a reputation for fumbling. The Jets, beaten out of a chance for Foreman, chose Owens on the 13th pick of the first round.

Foreman, who prefers running with the ball to catching it, was cured of fumbling by Ewbank, who showed him how to hold the ball at the Senior Bowl,

Hero of Year to Be Honored for Rescue Feat

WALTER R. FLETCHER
A German shepherd who saved his master's life when he pulled out of a whirlpool, is the dog hero of the year. As a result of the act, he will be honored at a dinner, sponsored by the Quaker Oats Company, in Atlanta on Wednesday night and will have the Ken-L Ration gold medal draped around his neck.

At 6:30 P.M., she learned Cooper had been located but that he couldn't be brought out until the next day. Meanwhile, Baughn, while retracing his steps, met a gold miner who had a cabin in the area. From Baughn's description of the terrain where the mishap had occurred, the miner was able to find Cooper and Faulkner in the afternoon.

There is also a gold-plated collar and leash and a supply of dog food waiting for her. For his owners, Mr. and Mrs. A. Cooper of Orangevale, Calif., is a $1,000 United States bond.

Shortly afterward, a California National Guard helicopter spotted the men. However, the chopper was too large to get down into the ravine, so it landed an Army reserve paramedic and a half-dozen deputy sheriffs nearby.

On the weekend before last, the rescue party was off in the wrong direction. The miner—and I never learned his name—ran after them, shouting until he gained their attention and they found us. By this time, it was getting dark.

The foliage was so dense in the area," said Cooper, "the rescue party was off in the wrong direction. The miner—and I never learned his name—ran after them, shouting until he gained their attention and they found us. By this time, it was getting dark.

The three men had not returned on the eighth. Mrs. Cooper phoned the county sheriff's office. On Monday, she was told an alert had been made and a search started.

The next morning, the National Guard requested assistance from the 41st Aerospace Rescue and Recovery Squadron, and Air Force Military Air-Lift Command unit at McClellan Air Force Base, near Sacramento, to assist in the project.

It responded by sending a smaller helicopter and Cooper was loaded into a stretcher basket and flown to Auburn County Hospital.

"It's an excellent example of a representative cooperative action between the military and civilian authorities in a rescue effort," said Maj. William Baughn, public affairs spokesman for the Air Force.

After X-rays had been taken and medical attention administered, Cooper was transferred to a hospital near Orangevale. On the way, stop was made at his home. "By chance," he recalled, "Everett and Gary drove in almost at the same time. My first question was for Zorro, and they told me he had been left behind."

"My husband was worried and angry," said Mrs. Cooper. "I phoned the police, radio and TV stations and the Orangevale and Sacramento papers. Dog lovers promptly responded and we had dozens of phone calls from people volunteering to go after Zorro."

The next day, Jack Rankin and two other members of the Sierra Club of Sacramento found the animal.

"He wouldn't let us near his master's pack," said Rankin. "But he hadn't had any food since the previous morning, so we enticed him with a sandwich and some canned peaches. Once we had his confidence, he came with us and we all hiked out to our jeep. At the first dinner we passed, Zorro had his Thanksgiving dinner a day early. We bought him some hamburgers."

How did the dog get the name Zorro? "My wife and I were watching a TV program eight years ago called 'Zorro,'" said Cooper. "We heard a whimpering in the front yard. There was a scrawny pup. We took him in, fed him and named him after the hero of the show." Now he's the hero.

"I wouldn't be alive if it wasn't for my dog," said Cooper. "Repeatedly, when I'd lose consciousness, I fell into the water, and each time he got me out."

A second-place award went to Red, an Irish setter, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Morris of St. Charles, Mo. The redcoat, abandoned by his previous owner, had been found by Morris only three weeks before his heroic deed, when he saved 2-year-old Margaret Morris, from an automobile that had gone up in flames.

Red had been left in the car with the child, while the Morris was shopping. Smelling smoke, the setter leaped through a partially open window, grabbed the youngster's coat collar and pulled her to safety.

Daisy Mae, a mixed breed mostly clearwater, owned by Terry Legatti of Clearwater, Fla., took third prize. Daisy Mae had been a daily visitor to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Aiken, neighbors of Miss Legatti. While trimming a tree, Aiken fell 15 feet to an asphalt driveway, fracturing his right thigh. His screams brought the hound, who kept up a constant barking until Mrs. Aiken came out to investigate and found her husband, then unconscious. The canine heroine then had to be rescued. A neighbor hearing the barking had phoned the police. As an ambulance took Aiken away, a dog control unit hauled Daisy Mae off to the pound. She was claimed by her owner.

about a dozen, which we skinned, gutted, separated the legs from the breasts, and delivered to the kitchen at Hodges' restaurant, where they were browned in a pan, then simmered in a small amount of water for short while. We had them for supper along with fresh, fried shrimp and a marvelous side dish of fried frogs legs.

The clapper rail, which is smaller than the king rail, but larger than the sora or Virginia rail, has a body about the size of a robin's, its dark flesh has a flavor that is a cross between, say, a woodcock and a black duck.

Harris is rarely engaged to go railbird hunting but has a substantial waterfowl clientele. The second half of the state's duck season runs from Dec. 8 to Jan. 20. Bookings with Harris may be made through Hodges, whose telephone number is (919) 725-3575.

Wood, Field and Stream: Memory Haunts a Hunter

by NELSON BRYANT

RS ISLAND, N.C.—More than 30 years ago my father, who was an avid sportsman, wrote a book that recounted the adventures of a youthful railbird hunter, who lived to try someday for those elusive, low, wet places my-while ago my resolve—which did not consume me—was to fruition in the broad tidal flats at the mouth of the North In Back Sound, near Harkers-

As we went toward the hunting area in Harris' flat-bottom outboard powered skiff, he explained to us that the tide, although near flood, would not be high enough to work the birds from the boat. Classic railbird hunting calls for poling a skiff, with the gunner seated in front on a stool, over the marshes at high tide. As the water rises, the birds move to the highest ground available so are concentrated in small areas. There are only four or five perigee tides a month that lend themselves to this approach, although an offshore storm or a strong prevailing wind from the right direction can create unusually high water. Ten good poling days a season is about par in the Northeast for railbird hunters. One can, of course, walk the marshes for the birds.

Wade in the Water

"We are going to have to wade for them," Harris said, and wade we did, sometimes in water nearly up to our waists, through mud, grass and clumps of sharp-edged oysters.

I missed no rails, all clappers, that galloped before me that day, but some required a second shot. It is, I discovered, difficult to shoot well when one cannot get one's feet into proper position.

In three hours of hunting we bagged

Seven Errors Prove Costly to Dartmouth

Elis Score by 37-6 On Ground Game

By PARTON KEENE

HANOVER, N.H., Oct. 16—Mix the Crimson of Harvard with the Green of Dartmouth and you usually get a color-packed football game to rival New England's most flamboyant autumn foliage. Today at Memorial Field before 20,336 spectators, the Crimson met the Big Green for the 80th time since 1882, and the color came out cheerfully.

That's what happens when seven Dartmouth fumbles turned their team to blushing red as well as costing them the contest, 17-10. It was the third loss in a row to Harvard, which along with Dartmouth has won or shared the Ivy League title since 1968.

Though Dartmouth lost the ball on fumbles four times, didn't get a first down until the final minute of the first half and couldn't reach Harvard territory until the end of the second period, it came within a yard of scoring a touchdown as the game ended.

Harvard Scores Early
A second-half team most of this season, Dartmouth started off backwards and was almost immediately surprised by a scoring pass by Jim Kubacki, the Harvard quarterback, to Bob Kinchen, his running back, that covered 49 yards.

Bottled up for most of the first period, the Green fumbled three times to put tremendous pressure on its defense. "The two best defenses in the Ivy League," claimed Jake Crouthamel, the Dartmouth coach, and he may be right. Continually knocking at the end-zone door, Harvard was turned back almost as continually by the Green, led by John Muggelback and Dave Casper. Then Gary Boscic missed a 48-yard field goal in one desperate attempt to make up quarterback sacking and a total of 75 yards in penalties.

When Dartmouth wasn't fumbling, its punters, Jeff Terrell and Jeff Hickey, were getting off feeble kicks of 11 yards and 6 yards. The first one gave Harvard the ball at the Dartmouth 39, and on the running of Tom Winn and the passing of Kubacki, Harvard tallied again to lead, 14-0.

First First Down
With seconds left in the half, Dartmouth got his first first down on Kevin Case's pass to Harry Wilson. Flushed with success, Nick Lawry tried a 51-yard field goal just before the half and made it. The distance tied the second longest field goal in Dartmouth history, set by Pudge Neidinger in 1922 and was 4 yards short of the longest, set by Jim Robertson in 1919.

Case, Sam Coffey and Wilson got the ball to midfield, but Dartmouth had to punt. When it traveled only 8 yards, the groans from the home stands sounded like thunder. Amazingly, however, Harvard lost 27 yards, had to punt again, and Dartmouth had one final chance.

One More Fumble
From the Harvard 44, the Green went to the 1 in 10 plays, surviving two measurements for first downs along the way. Harvard held once on the 1, and then up cropped the long-lost, but not forgotten, fumble.

A bad snap from center sent the ball back to the 9, where Dartmouth recovered. After a 5-yard penalty and with 1 second left, Case took off on a roll-out left. He found the way clear, but on the 3, Tom Joyce, one of Harvard's top linebackers, grabbed him and threw him to the turf.

"I was going to try for a 2-point conversion instead of a tie," Crouthamel revealed after the game. "But the bad snap ruined that idea." So did the seven fumbles.

Brown Tops Cornell, 28-12; Leads Ivy

THACA, N.Y., Oct. 16—Brown overcame five first-half turnovers today and rolled over Cornell, 28-12, in an Ivy League football game at Schoellkopf Field.

The victory gave the Bruins a 3-1 Ivy non-loss mark, and moved Coach John Anderson's squad into sole possession of first place. Cornell, which had upset Harvard last week, fell to 1-3 in the league.

Brown rolled up 29 first downs as it rushed for 350 yards and passed for 140 more. Seth Morris led the Bruin ground game with 93 yards. Bill Hill added 76 yards on 14 carries. Brown held Cornell to just 215 total yards.

Cornell scored near the end of the first period. Jim Lorditch, a Cornell tackle blocked a punt and Charley Payne fell on the ball at the Bruin 29-yard line. Four plays later, Marty Meeker kicked a 43-yard field goal, his first successful attempt of the season.

Brown made only one serious threat in the first quarter when it moved to the Cornell 6. Morris fumbled and Dave Johnson recovered for Cornell, halting the drive.

Pitt Wins; Mark Near For Dorsett
the first of two. His first scoring placement was 25 yards.

Again the Pitt defense set things up as Bob Jury recovered another Miami fumble at the Hurricanes' 24. Long followed with a 39-yard field goal. The Yewic-Dorsett pass-play gave the Panthers a 22-0 lead at intermission.

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 16—Yale unleashed three speedy running backs—John Pagliaro, Mike Southworth and Rick Angelone—in the Bowl this afternoon, and the Elis overwhelmed injury-plagued Columbia, 37-6, before 14,035 fans.

Pagliaro scored three touchdowns and ran 118 yards on just 12 rushing attempts. The left halfback, from nearby Derby, Conn., scored on runs of 18 and 7 yards in the opening 15 minutes and added his final touchdown on a 25-yard burst early in the third period.

Southworth, a bruising 220-pound fullback from Webster Groves, Mo., smashed to a career high of 106 yards on 11 carries, and Angelone, a sophomore from Wallingford, Conn., picked up 75 on 13. Both Pagliaro and Angelone were all-state performers in high school.

Yale's scores, besides Pagliaro's rushes, came on a 26-yard pass from Bob Rizzo to John Spagnola in the third period; a 3-yard touchdown run by Eddie Lewis at the start of the final period, after an interception, and a 23-yard field goal by Randy Carter in the second period.

Yale wound up with 390 yards on the ground and 60 through the air. The Elis really did not have to throw the ball at all.

Yale's Offensive Line Excels
The Elis' offensive line opened quick holes for the backs, and Columbia had run out of strength by the end of the third quarter. By then Carmen Cozza, Yale's coach, had put in his second- and third-stringers, and the game turned into a series of mistakes by both sides in the final period.

Cal Mottie, Columbia's sophomore quarterback, from Newton, Mass., displayed poise in running the Lions' attack; he made good use of option pitchouts to Bruce Stephens and Paul McCormick. But the Lions were up against a Yale defense that was unmovable when the occasion demanded.

Stephens picked up 58 yards, McCormick added 49, and Mottie hit Fred Sullivan, Paul O'Connor and Art Pulcinella for three substantial gains through the air.

Lions' Best Drive at Outset
Columbia's best drive came at the outset of the game. The Lions took the kickoff and drove 60 yards in eight plays. Then Bob McKeon booted a 38-yard field goal to give the Lions their only lead, 3-0. McKeon booted another field goal, of 21 yards, early in the second period, but the Lions still trailed, 14-6, and they never really got another chance.

McKeon's second 3-pointer was a result of a Columbia drive that began at the Yale 46-yard line. After John Nubani had fumbled a McKeon punt. The ball was recovered by Dave Spinoza.

Yale's powerful ground game produced drives of 68 yards in 11 plays, 37 in eight, 55 in 10, 82 in nine and 77 in five. The last was sparked by Southworth's longest gain, a 40-yard burst from scrimmage midway through the third period.

The Lions were badly hampered on both offense and defense by injuries to key performers. In fact, 14 players were either missing or playing hurt.

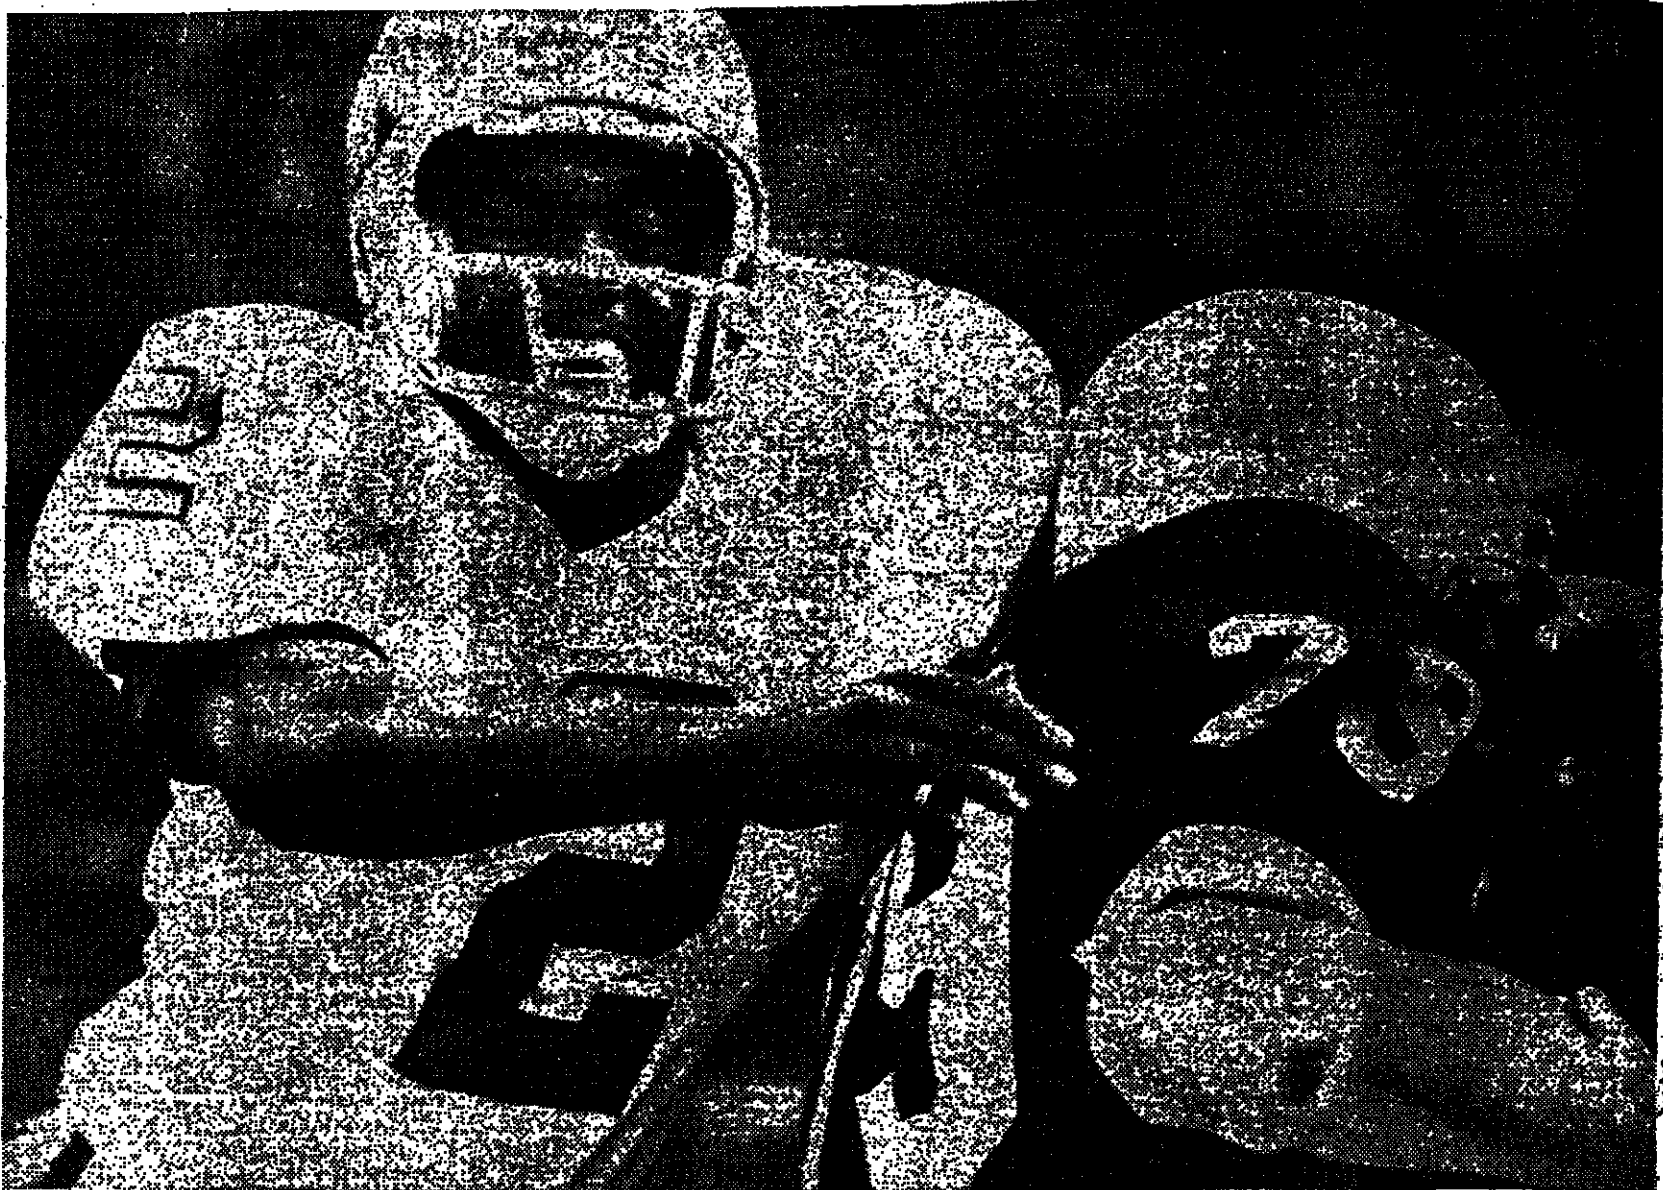

The most severe losses were at tight end (particularly important for blocking on the veer offense), at middle guard and at linebacker.

Kirk Combs, a defensive end; Mike McGraw, a linebacker, and Dave Hickey, a tight end, did not dress.

Tim Towler, his left arm dangling, played, but his capacity was severely limited at right defensive tackle. Lou Guarnieri, the No. 1 tight end, lasted about 10 minutes before his bad ankle took him to the sideline for good. Steve Venek, a defensive right end, was hurt in the penning quarter and did not return.

With such regular performers out, the Lions were no match for Yale's strong team.

Yale beat the Lions for the fifth successive time in winning its fourth game of the campaign in five starts and second in three Ivy League games. Columbia, which has defeated Yale in the Bowl since 1961, dropped to a 22-3 record, 1-3 in the league.

Penn State Vanquishes Syracuse

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa., Oct. 16 (AP)—Joe Geise and Mike Guman combined for 187 yards and three touchdowns today as Penn State beat Syracuse, 27-3, in the 54th meeting of the Eastern college football rivals.

Geise, who gained 98 yards, scored from 27 yards out. Guman, a freshman, gained 89. He tallied from the 3 and the 1.

Syracuse's only score came on a 24-yard field goal in the second quarter by Dave Jacobs.

Geise scored the first Penn State touchdown on his 27-yard run, four plays after Syracuse had fumbled the ball away early in the first quarter.

Tony Capozzoli, a freshman, made the score 10-1 in the second quarter on a 25-yard field goal, shortly after Syracuse had turned the ball over by fumbling a fourth-down center snap on a punt attempt.

Penn State raised it to 17-3 near halftime on a 10-play, 76-yard drive capped by Guman's 3-yard drive into the end zone.

Penn State drove 64 yards on 12 plays in the third quarter to make it 24-3, with Guman diving into the end zone from the 1-yard line. Penn State wrapped up its scoring late in the third period on a 34-yard field goal by Capozzoli.

This was the fourth loss, against two victories, for Syracuse. Penn State evened its record at 3-3.

N.C. State 21, N. Carolina 13
CHAPEL HILL, N.C., Oct. 16 (AP)—Johnny Evans and Ted Brown led North Carolina State to three touchdowns in the first half as the Wolfpack scored a 21-13 victory over arch-rival North Carolina in an Atlantic Coast Conference game today.

Richard Wheeler intercepted Matt Kupec's pass in the first period and set up State's first score. State put together drives of 98 and 97 yards for second-period touchdowns. North Carolina scored shortly before the half on a 32-yard pass from Kupec to Wayne Tucker, and late in the third period on a 2-yard run by Mike Voight.

Post Beats Kings Point Colgate, Lafayette, L Is 17-7 Vic

KINGS POINT, L.I., Oct. 16—C. W. Post, ranked first in the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division III poll and in the Lambert Bowl, ruined the homecoming of the United States Merchant Marine Academy here today by handing the Mariners a 16-0 defeat.

It was the sixth straight victory of the season for undefeated Post; their 10th over the last two years and 17th of the last 18. It was the first loss of the season in five games for Kings Point, which was ranked second in the Lambert Bowl balloting and fifth in the N.C.A.A. Division III rankings.

The C.W. Post defense harassed the Mariners all afternoon, sacking them two quarterbacks a total of 6 times for 45 yards in losses, intercepting them four times and returning them 16 yards.

However, it was mistakes—two bad snaps from center on punting attempts and a blocked punt—that led to all the Post scoring. Penalties also hurt the Mariners. They were called 8 times for a loss of 100 yards.

Don Giovinco, a fullback from Hauppauge, L.I., scored both of the Post touchdowns, and finished with only 2 yards gained on the ground, out of Posts' 32 yards rushing. Kings Point gained only 28 yards on the ground.

The other 4 Post points were scored by Steve Fominson, a freshman place-kicker who converted on both touchdowns and by a safety credited to Don Fenner, a defensive tackle who trapped Greg Vanderlaan, the Mariners' punter, in the end zone on the second-half snap from center by Keith Walzak, a sophomore.

Walzak's first bad snap was downed on the 1-yard line by Vanderlaan, and Giovinco took it over on the first play for a 7-0 lead.

The interceptions and the penalties helped wipe out any progress Kings Point was making through a series. They did, however wind up with 186 yards on 16 completions in 36 attempts. Insenberg who replaced Pacileo, the starter, had 7 of 15 for 105 yards and only threw 1 interception.

Ernie Prodrumides, the Post quarterback, completed 8 of 13 passes for 115 yards and had 2 interceptions. The 37 yards rushing was Post's lowest total of the season. Ed Ruth's game-leading 55 yards, L.I., scored both of the Post touchdowns, and finished with only 2 yards gained on the ground, out of Posts' 32 yards rushing. Kings Point gained only 28 yards on the ground.

Badminton Possible In 1984 Olympics

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP)—Badminton may be included in the 1984 Olympic Games. Lord Killam, president of the International Olympic Committee, is quoted as having said.

He is reported to have said this to Aziz Bokhari Bab, the Badminton Association of Malaysia secretary, at a sports administration course at Sussex University in Britain.

Aziz said Lord Killam ruled out the possibility of badminton being included in the 1980 Games at Moscow but there was a possibility of its inclusion in the 1984 Games.

Aziz said he was happy with the I.O.C. president's statement and hoped that badminton players in the world would not resort to unamateuristic practices, such as advertising, to jeopardize the game being played at the world's premier sports carnival.

He said that of late, several badminton players had posed for advertisements, which was not in accordance with the I.O.C.'s ruling on amateurism.

Aziz said that such practices could jeopardize the efforts of the International Badminton Federation to include badminton as an Olympic sport.

Penn Subdues Lafayette, 15-0 On Late Rally

EASTON, Pa., Oct. 16—A plunge by Johnny Mason late fourth quarter gave Pennsylvania 15-14 victory over Lafayette today.

The Quakers' offense had spent throughout the game but their Tim Mazzetti scored three field goals including one of 54 yards, and Penn within striking distance. The rally was the second in a row for which had beaten previously under Brown, 7-6, last week.

Penn had scored first in the when Mazzetti kicked a field goal 28 yards out with 5 minutes 46 seconds left in the first period.

Penn did not pick up another down until just before the end of the second period. Lafayette, now 1-1 in the season, took the lead with 2:31 in the first half when John C. scored from 1 yard out.

Penn moved 69 yards in the second drive down to the Lafayette 23 and Mazzetti then kicked his 40 yards. The half-time score was Lafayette.

Lafayette dominated first half with 154 yards' total offense.

Carol Mann Is More Than Pro Golfer Industry Aid Counted On By A.A.U.

By MARGARET ROACH
Thirty-five-year-old Carol Mann projects an enviable assuredness and sparkle as she speaks. Perhaps she is more frequently envied for her outstanding 16-year career on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour and her two and a half years of service as president of the L.P.G.A., but to meet Miss Mann is to meet more than a professional golfer. She is a striking woman at 6 feet 3 inches, with an engaging smile that expresses her confidence and openness. Miss Mann has recently returned to the tour after being out for three months with a back problem caused by a chronic degenerative disc. This was not the first time she had been hampered by the injury, she was hospitalized and placed in traction in 1964.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Oct. 16 (UPI)—Sue Flanders is $300 poorer as a result of the National Amateur Athletic Union convention. Miss Flanders, a Western Illinois University senior, competes in synchronized swimming and, like other amateur athletes, constantly competes for money also. In addition to spending $300 of her savings to travel to the A.A.U. convention here this week, Miss Flanders financed her way to the national championships in Houston earlier this year. She also camped out so she could afford a trip to Ohio to meet with fellow competitors.

According to Mason Bell, the A.A.U.'s director of sports development, most of the athletes' financial help comes from their own labors and from local groups. The national A.A.U. pays expenses at the national championships each year for the defending champion only. All others must pay their way.

Rutgers Beats Lehigh, 28-21, For 13 in Row

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Oct. 16—Jim Hughes, a junior from Verona, N.J., returned an intercepted pass 26 yards today for a tie-breaking touchdown with 6 minutes 5 seconds remaining as Rutgers rallied to defeat Lehigh, 28-21, before 15,000 spectators. It was the 13th straight victory for the Scarlet, the longest collegiate winning streak in the nation, since they were upset here by Lehigh a year ago, 34-20.

Rutgers has won six times in six starts this season. Lehigh, which won its first three games, lost for the third week in a row. The Engineers put up a stiff battle, leading 7-0, 14-7 and 21-14, but Rutgers' vaunted defense turned the tide in the final period. The Scarlet, down 21-14 in the fourth quarter, pulled into a tie with 7:31 left on a four-down play from the 2-yard line. Bert Kosupki pass to Mike Fisher, reaching the Lehigh 8, set up the score. On Lehigh's next series of downs Hughes turned in his winning interception.

Each team turned a break into a touchdown in the first half and both managed a scoring drive as the score read 14-14 at the intermission. Lehigh struck first when a poor pass from center, on a punt, led to a block by Jim McCormick and gave the Engineers possession at the Rutgers 5. On third down Joe Rieker threw 5 yards to Larry Henshaw for the touchdown. Two minutes later Sam Davis recovered a fumbled punt for Rutgers on the Lehigh 3. Fisher rammed his way over in two attempts, scoring from the 1, to make it 7-7.

Lehigh came back with a sustained march of 63 yards to regain the lead. Rieker connected with Rod Gardner on passes of 9 and 13 yards and Lennie Daniels for 25 yards. Gardner and Dave April picked up some yardage on the ground and April knifed across from the 3. Rutgers came right back with a drive of its own. After a 46-yard kickoff return by Henry Jenkins. With the ball on the Lassiter rammed into the end zone. Lehigh made the only points in the third quarter, driving 88 yards to take the lead for the last time at 21-14. The Engineers didn't throw a pass, relying completely on the running of Gardner, April, Daniels, and Rieker. April scored from the 1 with 32 seconds remaining in the period.

N.B.A.'s 31st Season: New Teams, New Coaches, New Players

By SAM GOLDAPER

The expanded National Basketball Association opens its 31st season Thursday night with four new teams, eight new coaches, dozens of players wearing different uniforms and a new playoff structure.

Most of the play upheaval was caused when the red white and blue ball of the American Basketball Association became a collector's item after four of the six teams were accepted into the N.B.A. The addition of the Nets, Denver Nuggets, San Antonio Spurs and Indiana Pacers has been called a "merger," "accommodation" and "expansion."

John Y. Brown, the owner of the Kentucky Colonels, one of the two A.B.A. teams that was bought out by the four who joined the N.B.A. had another word for it. He called it "madness."

It didn't take Brown long to get back into the "madness" of pro basketball. He used the reported $3 million from the sale to purchase half-ownership in the Buffalo Braves of the N.B.A.

Sam Schulman, the Seattle SuperSonics owner, who had cast the only dissenting vote against the merger last June, said after the incorporation of the four A.B.A. teams: "We did those people a favor."

The "favor," in addition to a cash entrance fee of $3.2 million by each of the four teams, was the infusion of the exciting play of Julius Erving of the Nets and David Thompson of the Nuggets into the N.B.A. Also, the finest talents of the defunct Colonels, Spirits of St. Louis and Virginia Squires were dispersed to strengthen several N.B.A. teams.

A.B.A. Was Shunted Aside
Sports thrives on comparisons, and during the A.B.A.'s nine years, four months and 15 days of struggle for survival, many futile attempts were made to match the champions of the two leagues. The A.B.A. offers fell on deaf ears. The N.B.A. strategy was to isolate the rival league from national television exposure and its lucrative revenues.

Thus, in many parts of the country, newspapers failed to carry the A.B.A. standing, and Erving's accomplishments of his last five seasons were virtually unknown. Millions of fans were deprived of a chance to see Erving's moves on the court. He stirs emotions with his body control, quickness and the way he shifts the ball from his right hand to his left before he lets the ball fly from somewhere behind his ear.

Meanwhile, basketball waits to see if the 6-foot-7-inch Erving will be able to accomplish the same feats in the more defensive-minded N.B.A. and with which team. Erving has held out during preseason claiming he had been promised to have his contract renegotiated. But when his problems are finally resolved there will be Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Los Angeles Lakers, Bob Lanier of the Detroit Pistons, Wes Unseld of the Washington Bullets and Dave Cowens of the Boston Celtics, the huge centers who control big pieces of defensive territory all by themselves waiting to test Erving.

How well will the former A.B.A. teams do?
The Nets are in the tough Atlantic Division against the always-powerful Boston Celtics and the rising Philadelphia 76ers. The Spurs are in the Central Division with the Cleveland Cavaliers, who blossomed last season and ended the Washington Bullets' six-season reign as division champion. Denver, which had a 60-24 won-lost record, the best in pro basketball last season, and the Pacers are in the strengthened Midwest Division against the Chicago Bulls, Detroit Pistons, Milwaukee Bucks and Kansas City Kings.

Gilmore Now With Bulls
The Bulls, who finished with a 24-58 mark last season, the worst in the N.B.A., appear to have strengthened themselves the most. Lacking a dominant center, Chicago paid $1.1 million into the A.B.A. dispersal pool for 7-2 Artis Gilmore, who averaged 24.6 points and 15.5 rebounds for the Colonels in the college draft, Chicago selected Scott May, the powerfully built 6-8 forward, the vital cog in the Indiana University to the national championship. However, May, the college player of the year, contacted mononucleosis and his vital early pro training has been impaired.

Since the Nets, San Antonio and Indiana all lack dominant centers, and the Nuggets enjoy the frontline of Thompson, Bobby Jones and Dan Issel, plus Willy Wise and Marvin Webster as backup, Denver is given the best chance of the newcomers of making the playoffs.

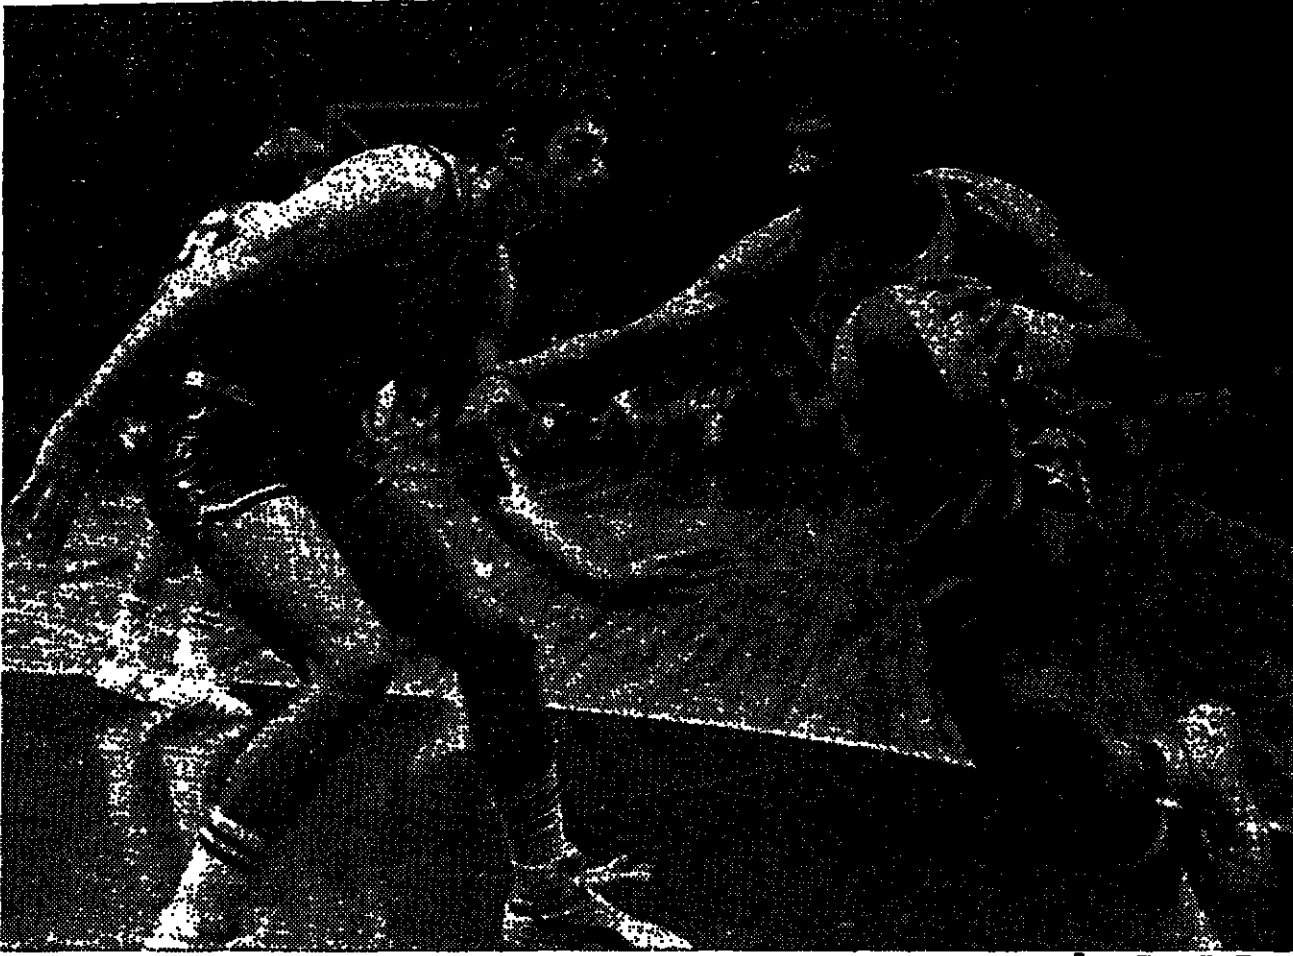

In the new playoff structure, 12, instead of 10, teams will qualify. Each of the four division champions will automatically gain a berth. The other eight spots will be filled by the four teams with the best records in each of the Eastern and Western Conferences. Previously the two top finishers in each of the four divisions were joined by one "wild" card team from each conference.

Coaches played musical chairs during the offseason. Jack Ramsay, not rehired at Buffalo, replaced Lenny Wilkens at Portland. Tates Locke, the Braves' assistant coach, took over for Ramsay in Washington, beating the first round of the Eastern Conference playoffs after the Bullets had been the preseason favorites for the championship, dismissed K. C. Jones and hired Dick Motta of the Chicago Bulls. Ed Badger, Motta's assistant, replaced him. Hubie Brown, the Kentucky Colonel coach, moved south to Atlanta as the replacement for Cotton Fitzsimmons.

The Los Angeles Lakers, out of the playoffs the last two seasons, moved Bill Sharman to general manager and replaced him as coach with Jerry West, the former Laker star. The Houston Rockets discharged John Eggen and hired Tom Nissitke. Of the former A.B.A. teams, only San Antonio has a new coach. Doug Moe, the assistant coach of the Denver Rockets, replaced Bob Bass.

The addition of the A.B.A. teams, many new faces in new places and a hastily drawn schedule, in which each team plays the other only four times, has created an unusual uncertainty for prognostication and grading of teams. Larry Costello, the Milwaukee Bucks coach, may have put it best when he said, "This is going to be the toughest it has ever been. You can't name me one team that can't win. It's going to be a suicide league."

Yet, the Philadelphia 76ers, with a glut of talent, and strengthened by the long-awaited arrival of Caldwell Jones at center, should be the class of the Julius Erving of Nets driving past Bobby Jones before scoring against Denver Nuggets.

Eastern Conference. Unless Bill Walton finally does wonders for the Portland Trail Blazers, the Golden State Warriors should recover the momentum that slipped away in the playoffs last season, and dominate the Western Conference.

Eastern Conference

Atlantic Division

The once-proud Knicks, with their unselfish offense and defense of past seasons, played like stragglers at times last season. Their passing was sloppy, there was a noticeable lack of cohesion and the defense was poor. The acquisition of Jim McMillian gives the Knicks a 15-point scorer, and a player with a reputation of team player who moves well without the ball.

Walt Frazier and Earl Monroe are classy, high-scoring guards and McMillian and Spencer Haywood are outstanding frontcourt men. The question then is the fifth starter. In time, the Knicks hope it will be Lonnvie Shelton, the 6-8, 240-pound rookie from Oregon State, playing center.

Coach Red Holzman has experimented with Haywood at center and has placed more emphasis in training camp and preseason play on changing the style to a running game. Without the benefit of training camp last season, Haywood, obtained from the SuperSonics before the season opener, found it easier to lace a pair of sneakers and shoot a misbehaving jump shot than learn the Knicks system. If the 6-8 Haywood has finally learned the company way, if Shelton lives up to his college press clippings and the Knicks are able to run more, their playoff chances will be greatly enhanced.

The Nets also have a question mark at center. Last season as a rookie the 6-11 Kim Hughes left some doubts that he could make it as a legitimate center. But Erving is without peer, and teamed with Nate Archibald, will make the Nets one of the most exciting teams to watch. Archibald, with his ability to penetrate, should make life easier for Erving, who is at his best when he gets inside.

The Nets will get some good scoring nights from John Williamson, and 6-4 Al Skinner specializes in defense. Most of the other Nets are young and still-unknown factors. Rich Jones, Tim Bassett and Jan van Breda Kolff are forwards, but none has a great scoring reputation.

After Cowens of the Boston Celtics had scored 33 points and grabbed 27 rebounds one night against the 76ers last season, Gene Shue, the Philadelphia coach, said, "Our weakness was right up the middle. We probably outplayed all their players, but they dominated at center. It wasn't even close."

Jones Is 76ers Man in Middle
The 76ers have searched for an overpowering center ever since they traded Wilt Chamberlain to Los Angeles for the 1968 season and began their descent. Last season they invested almost $1 million to sign Darryl Dawkins out of high school. Dawkins has outstanding potential and coaches agree that when he matures he will be a star. But for now the 76ers have Caldwell Jones, a slim 6-11, but with super center written over his frame. Jones drifted from San Diego to Kentucky and finally to St. Louis in the A.B.A.'s final problem season, and the shifting impaired his progress. Harvey Catchings is a third center.

If Shue had depth in the middle, the 76ers are equally as strong at forward with George McGinnis, Steve Mix, Mel Bennett, Joe Bryant and Terry Furlow. If Billy Cunningham's knee mends, Philadelphia will be even stronger. McGinnis, of course, is the big name in the frontcourt. He is so strong he has bent rims dunking the basketball.

The backcourt, too, has a wealth of talent, beginning with starters, Doug Collins and Fred Carter, both 20-point scorers last season. Lloyd Free can penetrate and score and when Henry Bibby was a Knick, he had the best shooting range on the team.

The Celtics, who won a 13th championship last May, are conceding nothing to St. Louis in the A.B.A.'s final season. Last season, the Boston president and general manager, comes up with a key player. Last season it was Charlie Scott to bolster the backcourt, this time it's Sidney Wicks to strengthen an aging frontline. The 27-year-old Wicks had a 23-point career scoring average in his five seasons with Portland. He will form a strong frontline, with Cowens in the middle and 36-year-old John Havlicek at the small forward.

Coach Tom Heinsohn will now be able to use Paul Silas as his sixth man if Silas settles his contract difficulties.

Silas is in the option year of his contract and was absent from training camp. The addition of Wicks will also allow Heinsohn to break in 6-9 Norman Cook, the first-round draft choice out of Kansas, slowly, as is the usual Celtic policy.

The 6-8 Cowens enjoyed another excellent season, averaging almost 19 points and 16 rebounds a game. No team switches better or more often than the Celtics, and the key to everything is Cowens.

Celtics Have Strong Backcourt

Boston has outstanding offensive strength in a backcourt of Jo Jo White and Scott. White was the most valuable player in the final series against the Phoenix Suns, and Scott made a successful transition to the Celtic ways, after a reputation of being a shooter only.

Buffalo has been one of the most-feared offensive machines for the last three seasons when Bob McAdoo teamed with Randy Smith and McMillian. Midway through last season the Braves added John Shumate, another top scorer, and have signed Adrian Dantley, the No. 3 college scorer last season. The Braves' roster also includes Bird Averitt and John Neumann, former college scoring champions.

In an effort to cut the payroll, the Braves sold McMillian so they could sign Dantley. The move was harshly criticized in Buffalo. Many observers felt it weakened the Braves' depth at forward. They felt Dantley should have been allowed to play his way into the lineup, learning as the season progressed. The critics also pointed out that the Braves could have received needed bench strength in exchange for

McMillian instead of the $200,000 they got from the Knicks.

The 6-9 McAdoo as won the league scoring title for the last three seasons. But neither he nor the 6-9 Shumate or the 6-5 Dantley may have the physical strength to go against most of the bigger and stronger frontlines. Ernie DiGregorio, playing at lighter weight than ever, has apparently shaken off the effects of a knee injury he suffered two seasons ago. He has had his best training camp ever.

Buffalo's biggest problem will be its lack of bench strength. The team also still appears to be hounded by an inability to play team defense.

Central Division

Another battle between Cleveland and Washington for top honors is anticipated. The other four teams will jockey for positions, hopeful their worst percentages will be better than those of Atlantic Division teams in the race for playoff berths.

With the exception of Chuckie Williams, a 6-3 guard with a reputation, the same personnel to prove that last season's divisional title was not a fluke. Cleveland also has outstanding perimeter shooters and a good floor leader in Jim Clemons.

Jim Chones, the 6-11 center who suffered a broken foot in the playoffs, still has not regained his agility. So 35-year-old Nate Thurmond will have to log more time. The Cavaliers are much stronger defensively when Thurmond is clogging the middle. Bobby Smith, the only remaining Cavalier from a team formed seven years ago, and Jim Brewer are the starting forwards, with Campy Russell the replacement in Coach Bill Fitch's juggling of eight players.

Austin Carr, an outstanding scorer plagued by a series of injuries, is healthy for the first time in two seasons, having recovered from knee surgery and related difficulties. Dick Snyder and Fouts Walker are the other talented guards.

Although three rookies are expected to make the Bullet roster, Motta's main problem will be instilling his coaching philosophy to Elvin Hayes, Unseld, Phil Chenier and Dave Bing, the key players. Hayes is coming off the poorest season of his eight-year career. He averaged 19.8 points and 10.8 rebounds.

"I look at the Bullets as if I was a 73 or 74 golfer," said Motta. "You don't improve so easily. You're there, you've got it. Only a couple of little things have to be improved, but that's all the Bullets need to win four, five or six more games."

The frontline of Hayes, Unseld and Len Robinson, is one of the best on paper. There is also good backup strength in 7-10 Mitch Kupchak, one of the two first-round draft picks, and Nick Weatherpoon. Bing and Chenier are a fine backcourt combination, but the weakness is when Motta will need to substitute Larry Wright from Grambling, the other first-round pick, may be the answer.

Spurs Depend on Paultz

San Antonio was the best perimeter shooting team in the A.B.A., but also one of the poorest defensively. While Moe was coaching in Denver, the stress was on offense and he is trying to impart that image to the Spurs. James Silas figures to establish himself quickly as one of the top N.B.A. guards. George Gervin is an outstanding shooter, Larry Kenon is strong and Mark Oberding can only get better. The key is whether Billy Paultz (6-11) can rebound with the big centers. The Spurs also lack depth.

Houston has a lot of guards, a lot of forwards, but the same problem at center. Kevin Kunnert, a 7-footer, is just adequate. To beef up the rebounding, Nissitke plans to move Rudy Tomjanovich closer to the basket. Rudy T's rebounding fell off from a 1972 high of 938 to 698 last season.

The Rockets gave up Joe Meriwether, a fine prospect as a rookie, to Atlanta for the first pick in the college draft and 6-10 Dwight Jones. The Rockets drafted 6-3 John Lucas to bolster the backcourt of Calvin Murphy and Mike Newlin.

Everything about the Jazz revolves around Pete Maravich's shooting, penetration and playmaking. To take some of the pressure off him, New Orleans acquired Gail Goodrich after he had played out his option with the Lakers. Maravich averaged 25.9 points and Goodrich 19.5. The Jazz also have some fine streak shooters in Nate Williams, Louie Nelson, Bud Stalworth and Aaron James.

The need is for more rebounding. Otto Moore, the starting center, was high in that category with just under 10 rebounds a game, and that's not enough. Moore has some good shot-blocking instincts but has problems handling rival centers. Maybe Rick Kelley, the 7-footer, will live up to his playing days at Stanford.

Atlanta has a flock of new faces and the same old problem, no big man to handle the prominent centers. The Hawks passed up drafting such big men as Leon Douglas and Robert Parish, trading the No. 1 pick to Houston for Meriwether. They also had the second choice in the dispersal draft, where plenty of big men were available, but traded the pick to Portland for Geoff Petrie, a guard who will miss the first few games because of knee surgery. Petrie averaged 18.8 points last season.

If Petrie is well, he will add to the Hawk offense that includes John Drew and Lou Hudson, a perennial all-star.

Western Conference

Midwest Division

Last season this division was the N.B.A. disaster area as the Milwaukee Bucks won the title with 38 victories and 44 defeats. This time, with the exception of the Indiana Pacers, it figures to be the strongest division. Aided by the dispersal and college drafts, the four league holdovers have bettered themselves, although several teams with strong frontlines have suspect backcourts.

Bulls the center they needed. Gilmore's credentials during his five A.B.A. seasons were the best, including a 24.5 scoring average last season and a 24.5 rebounding mark, tops in the league. When May recuperates he will join Bob Love, a 19.1 scorer, in a formidable frontline. The reserve talent of Mickey Johnson (15.3), Cliff Fongderer and John Laskowski, is young and good. The signing of 6-3 Willie Smith, the No. 2 draft choice, will help Norm Vanlier, Bob Wilson and Leon Benbow establish a stronger backcourt. Smith averaged 25.3 points at Missouri.

Denver's success story was set apart from failures in the A.B.A. The Nuggets did well at the gate, and when they were accepted into the N.B.A. they quickly sold 9,000 tickets. In Thompson, there is a special gift of excitement as he glides smoothly and confidently to the basket. Then, after a quick step, there is a lift-off and he is alone in the air piling up the baskets that gave him rookie-of-the-year honors and a 26-point average last season.

The 6-9 Jones, in his second season, gained the reputation as one of the top defensive forwards. The 6-9 Issel will give opposing centers fits on offense, but will have to play better defensively. The weakness in the backcourt showed up in the loss to the Nets for the A.B.A. championship. The Nuggets' backcourt could not handle the Nets' pressure defenses. Ralph Simpson, Chuck Williams, Fatty Taylor and Ted McClain, the guards, will see a lot of pressure defenses in the N.B.A.

Pistons Big Up Front

The Detroit Pistons are overloaded with outstanding frontcourt men, led by Lanier and Curtis Rowe. Detroit also added the 6-10 Douglas from the college draft, chose the high scoring 6-9 Marvin Barnes in the dispersal draft and signed the talented M.L. Carr as a free agent. The biggest news is a big guard to bolster Kevin Porter and Eric Money.

The Kansas City Kings made three moves to strengthen their hopes for a playoff spot. They took 6-10 Richard Washington first in the college draft, Ron Boone, a 22-point scorer in the dispersal draft and sent Archibald to the Nets for Brian Taylor, who will add to both defense and offense.

Until Washington, who is quick and agile, learns and matures the front line will be made up of Sam Lacey, an underrated but erratic center, Scott Wedman, the best forward, and Bill Robinson.

The Bucks exchanged Abdul-Jabbar last season for 7-1 Elmore Smith, Dave Meyers, Brian Winters and Junior Bridgeman, all young and talented. Meyers underwent knee surgery last August and will be sidelined for the opening of the season. Until he returns, Bob Dandridge a 21.5 scorer, will have to play with a lot of journeyman forwards.

Winters, who failed to excite Laker fans, averaged 18.2 points and became the Bucks' floor leader. The 6-5 Bridgeman is fast and agile and Smith's 15.6 point average was better than he had scored in the last three seasons. But Smith still has not made any great strides toward becoming a super center.

In the backcourt with Winters are the unknown talents of Jim Price and Gary Browne. The addition of Quinn Buckner, the No. 1 draft pick out of Indiana University, will help Bucks, whose specialty is defense, was the captain of the victorious United States Olympic team.

The best the Pacers can look forward to is finishing with the worst record in the conference, winning the coin toss from the Eastern Conference counterpart, and walking off with the 6-11 Kent Benson, the Indiana University center, as the prize. With the 6-10 Len Elmore lost for the season after knee surgery, the only consistent scorer is Billy Knight. The 6-5 Knight is a roamer. He goes where the ball is. The rest of the pacers—Don Buse, Darnell Hillman, Steve Green, Wil Jones, Freddie Lewis and Dave Robisch—are overmatched for the task ahead.

Pacific Division

Dick Vertlieb, the Golden State general manager last season, recently suggested that the special comradeship the 1974-75 Warriors enjoyed in winning the title was missing in the conference final last season against Phoenix. Perhaps that explains how the Suns, who finished 17 games behind Golden State during the regular season, eliminated the Warriors.

Golden State was by far the best team in the West last season and figures to be so again. The Warriors have an overabundance of talent and no weaknesses. The drafting of the 7-1 Parish further strengthened the center combination of Cliff Ray and George Johnson. Parish has played extremely well during the preseason.

Rick Barry's 21-point scoring average was almost 10 points below his 1974-75 mark; but he is still the reigning playmaker among forwards. Jamaal Wilkes, the other forward, and Phil Smith, the backcourtman, in their second seasons, took some of the scoring pressures off Barry as the Warriors were the top offensive team for the second straight season. Derek Delsey, Dwight Davis and Sonny Parker strengthen the frontcourt. Gus Williams grew up quickly in his rookie season and added scoring power to the backcourt of Charlie Dudley, Charlie Johnson and Smith.

Walton Is Blazer's Key

Portland has spent millions of dollars signing draft choices since they became a 1970-71 expansion team. The only thing the Blazers have to show for it is never having made the playoffs or won more than 38 games in any season. Ramsey is going to try to change that image as the team's fifth coach. When he was hired he said, "It's going to take a healthy Walton to turn Portland into a winner."

The injury-prone Walton played 35 games in his rookie season and 51 last season. When he is playing off, scoring and rebounding, the Trail Blazers are tough to beat. The 6-11 star has done all those things in preseason play and Ramsey is hopeful he will stay healthy. Portland drafted well in the dispersal and college drafts to bolster the frontline, which lost Lloyd Newson for at least 12 weeks with knee surgery. From the A.B.A., the Trail Blazers selected Moses Malone and Maurice Lucas, and in the college draft took Wally Walker, the University of Virginia's high-scoring forward. At guard, Lionel Hollins should blend nicely with Herm Gilliam, acquired from Seattle. Larry Steele will

The Suns will get a chance that last season wasn't a real addition of Ron Lee, the choice and a good scorer should help. Norton Guaranteed $1.1 Million if He Fights Foreman 7-5 Choice

By NEIL ANDOUR
Special to The New York Times
HOLLYWOOD, Fla., Oct. 16—Ken Norton has been guaranteed a minimum of $1.1 million to fight
George Foreman later this year,
Don King, the boxing promoter, announced today.
"The money is in the bank account of Norton's manager [Robert Byrum] in California," King said at a morning news conference following Foreman's fourth-round technical knockout of John (Dino) Dennis here last night.
"King said the money there last week, and he acknowledged receipt of the money."

Foreman appeared unconcerned with any other than a rematch with Ali, who took away his title with an eighth-round knockout two years ago in Zaire.
On the question of fighting Norton,
the 27-year-old former champion said,
"It doesn't matter what it's for. It could just be for the pleasure."
If any change has developed in Foreman over the last year, it appears to be in his personal habits rather than in his punching power. He has purchased a 200-acre farm outside of his home town at Marshall, Tex., and appears more relaxed and content with the solitude of the country and the companionship of his 13 Tennessee walking horses, six dogs, 40 head of cattle and pet tiger and lion.

Foreman: 'No Distractions'
"When you're out there training, there are no distractions," he said before today's news session, contrasting this life with the more frantic pace he formerly kept in Houston and on the West Coast. "The only time you can hear about something is when you turn on the TV. In the past, I used to get involved in things I didn't need to be."
Five years ago, Foreman said he doubted whether he would have enjoyed such a subdued existence. But the dramatic highs and lows of his career seem to have changed his priorities, and now he talks of a place that "makes me refresh myself."

The Politics of Housing: It Hits Where You Live

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

In a state assembly district in the Bensonhurst section of Brooklyn, tenant and landlord activists toil on opposite sides in a contest involving an incumbent legislator who had made strong tenant friends and bitter landlord enemies.

In another assembly district, in upper Manhattan, one group of tenant activists is playing a leading role in the campaign of an assemblywoman who considers a strong advocate of tenant interests while another is denouncing her as an "opportunist."

In numerous other local races, candidates are trying to outdo each other in promising who will work harder for such popular, deeply felt ends as holding down the soaring property tax or strengthening rent control laws.

In short, it is Election Season 1976, and many of those questions of hearth and home that are usually high

Rent controls are among the most bitterly contested, economically significant issues in the city these days, and yet only rarely are they the subject of political debate. Candidates tend to agree that to eliminate them would be unthinkable (or, perhaps, that to oppose them would be suicidal.) Controls are at issue, however, in the race between State Senator Roy M. Goodman and his opponent, George Spitz. Their views appear on page 8.

In many races, like the one between Senator James L. Buckley and Daniel P. Moynihan for Mr. Buckley's seat in the United States Senate, these issues are no more conspicuous than a dozen others. Indeed, where they are discussed at all, the positions taken are often predictable and not always factually accurate.

In at least one contest, however, a Democratic candidate for the State Senate—George Spitz, who is challenging the Republican-Liberal incumbent, Roy M. Goodman—is espousing maverick views against rent control. And in some of the others, bread-and-butter housing and real estate-related issues have become prominent.

on any New Yorker's scale of daily anxieties have emerged as issues on the city's political landscape.

This has been the case in several races for the New York State Legislature.

Newark's Tenant Managers

By RUDY JOHNSON

NEWARK—The new Stella Wright housing development, a child of one of the nation's longest rent strikes, is enjoying a robust infancy. Two years after ending the four-year rent strike, tenants of this city's most controversial public housing project have taken some firm initial steps toward reversing a deep-seated pattern of deterioration.

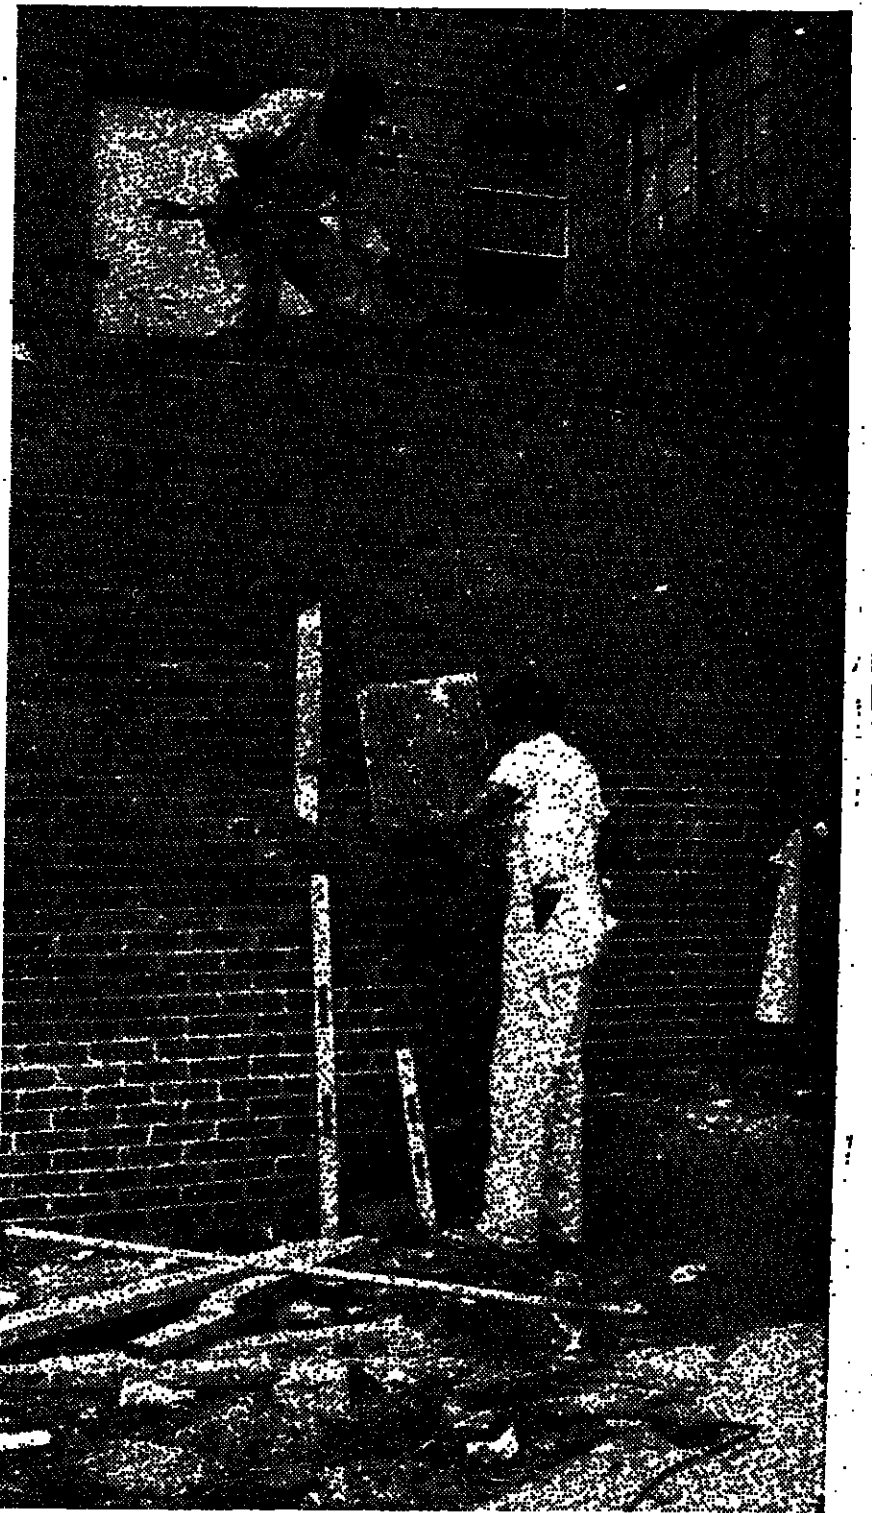

Through the innovation of tenant management, a term of the strike settlement, the tenants have begun to participate substantially in the day-to-day operation of the seven 13-story buildings—from the screening of applicants to the eviction recently of two tenants.

However, the 20 budding managers of the 1,206-unit project are not yet in full stride—they still have six months left of a management training course—and they are being advised to use their new powers adroitly. In a recent on-site training class, Terence McCormack, a St. Louis-based consultant with a special background in tenant management training, said that their main managerial task was to hold disorderly tenants to the rules of occupancy.

"If you don't do this," he said, "computing rent and the other things you learn here don't mean beans—they're just a few management tools." And he added: "When tenant management is really successful, you won't be going to court with a lot of evictions."

The tenant managers say, however, that they are not eager to go the eviction route anyway, preferring instead to screen potential new residents carefully and to use persuasion with those already in. "We try to treat them as graciously as possible," said Nellie Wilson, the tenant selection interviewer.

On the other hand, they emphasize that after so many years of hard experience in the project, they can be tough and wily when necessary. Lynn King, the chief operating officer

Diary of a Visit To a Haunted Hotel

By BEVERLY SOLOCHER

I am not a fan of mystery tales. As a child, I shunned Nancy Drew just as I have, as an adult, avoided Agatha Christie. Still, I am not immune to curiosity. So, when I was assigned to visit the site linked to one of this country's most chilling medical mysteries—Philadelphia's Bellevue Stratford Hotel—despite a certain apprehension, I went.

It was this hotel, long considered Philadelphia's premier convention spot, that last July played host to the Pennsylvania American Legion, the group whose name became associated with the dreaded and still unidentified disease that has thus far taken 29 lives and struck ill 151 others.

Unlike a number of old hotels throughout the country that have faltered, and in some cases failed, the Bellevue Stratford, which opened in 1904, has many of the ingredients considered crucial for continued success by real-estate experts.

It is, for instance, ideally located on a prime corner of Philadelphia's business and civic district—Broad and Walnut Streets.

Furthermore, besides its 750 sleeping rooms and a celebrated, elaborate ballroom, it has 20 function rooms, that currently rent for $40 to $250 a day. These rooms are a major draw not only for conventioners but also for local business people and politicians in need of centrally located meeting rooms.

Moreover, the hotel was updated with an $8 million renovation in the nineteen-fifties, although its Edwardian grace was preserved.

During this period, a four-bedroom Presidential suite was installed. This was not an unwarranted pretention. Every President since Theodore Roosevelt has slept at the Bellevue Stratford. Indeed, in 1976 alone, it has counted among its guests such notables as President Ford, President Valery Giscard d'Estaing of

Murray Hill Offices Will Be Converted to Apartments

By FOWLER

A year-old office building in Murray Hill, lost to its owners' foreclosure after standing vacant for several years, is being recycled into a luxury apartment house, the latest in a rapid conversions spurred by a tax-incentive program.

The program, known as J-51 and for a section of the administrative code that was 10 months ago to establish a five, has provided stimulus to the construction industry in the face of extreme stagnation, by permitting owners a tax credit of up to 90 percent of the investment, as well as a 12-month deferral of the tax liability. The program has created what many consider the most effective financial aid to their industry in the city's history in about the only game in town," Joel I. Picket, president of the Gotham Construction Corporation, said last week. Together with Kurt C. Walker, a principal in the Progressive Equities Corporation, Mr. Picket has bought the 16-story building at 244 Madison Avenue, on the southwest corner of 38th Street, for $1.8 million.

They plan to turn the building into a 180-unit apartment house, with rents starting at $350 a month for studios, $450 for one-bedroom suites and $550 for two-bedroom suites.

The Madison Avenue building is the first to be converted in a prestigious residential area under J-51, chiefly because most of the aging office, loft and hotel properties that lend themselves to recycling are situated in commercial or industrial districts.

More than a score of older buildings in the city are believed to be either under conversion or awaiting completion of plans. The number is uncertain because of the nature of the enabling law—the tax advantages are not available until the renovation is completed, so that city officials have no way of knowing exactly how many projects are under way or contemplated.

Among other properties known to be in process of renovation thanks to J-51 are a financial-district tower that once housed the New York Cotton Exchange, several lofts in Greenwich Village and on the lower West Side, and a 24-story office building on East 45th Street near the United Nations that was heavily damaged by a gas explosion two and a half years ago.

Recycling project on Madison Ave., latest of several under a new tax-incentive plan.

A common denominator of the buildings that appear to be suitable for recycling is their untenable economic status in their present use. Some, like 244 Madison Avenue, have fallen into foreclosure. Others were vacated by business concerns that owned the premises and could not find new tenants because of the current glut of commercial space in the city. Still others are dilapidated enough to require extensive rebuilding, affording the opportunity for timely conversion to residential use. In the Madison Avenue property, Mr. Picket plans to gut the structure from the second floor to the roof. The 12-foot ceilings will be kept in most living rooms and bedrooms in the remodeled premises. And the high ceilings—virtually unknown in post-World War II construction of any kind—will also make it possible to install interior balconies in some of the studio apartments.

An advantage of recycling is the comparative speed with which it can be accomplished. Work at 244 Madison Avenue will begin a few weeks from now, and occupancy is expected by late next spring or early summer. The nine-month construction period compares with two years or more if an apartment house of comparable size was started from scratch.

Another advantage, of course, is the cost; especially where a suitable property can be obtained inexpensively because it is in distress. The main tenant in the Madison Avenue building, Norcross, Inc., moved out several years ago, leaving the owner, one of the many partnership ventures of the realty investors Sol Goldman and the late Alex DiLorenzo, with an unenviable burden. The East River Savings Bank foreclosed, and like many another lending institution saddled with uneconomic properties, began casting about for a buyer.

The Picket-Walker partnership paid $1.8 million for the building and expects to spend $3 million on the conversion, but Mr. Picket estimates that with financing costs, architects' fees and other expenses the total outlay will come to nearly $6 million. Citibank is providing the construction loan and the East River Savings Bank the permanent mortgage.

For Gotham Construction, Mr.

If this doesn't beat raking, mowing, painting and commuting, our name isn't Winston Towers on the Palisades.

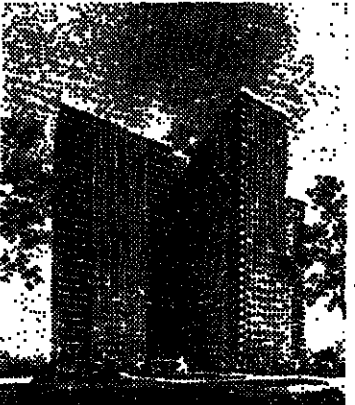

The Wieners had a suburban 2-story in Spring Valley to paint. A 6,000 sq. ft. lot to rake and mow. And a 60-minute commute to make the best of. And it all became just too much for them. So they moved to a 2-bedroom Winston Towers apartment home. Now they wonder why they waited so long.

Instead of 6,000 sq. ft. to drudge over, they now have Centex Homes Palisadium® at Winston Towers to delight in. This $4 million resort-and-leisure complex has an indoor heated pool. Bowling alleys. Health clubs. Billiard and card rooms. Cocktail lounge. 3-star gourmet restaurant. Outdoor tennis. Even a woodworking shop where Mr. Wiener can work with professional equipment he never had in his Spring Valley basement. And more. (Palisadium membership is included as part of your maintenance charge. Limited outside memberships accepted.)

Instead of a 60-minute car-then-train commute, a 25-minute scheduled express bus now takes Mr. Wiener to his mid-Manhattan office. Or both the Wieners to midtown theatres, shopping, museums.

While the Wieners are getting more out of life, Uncle Sam isn't getting a penny more out of the Wieners. The proceeds from their house sale became their condominium down payment (thereby avoiding a hefty capital gains tax.) And the tax benefits, equity accrual and profit potential are similar here as in their old home.

No wonder life is fun, friends and freedom from care for the Wieners now! It can be for you, too. See our model condominium apartments (they have between 1,215 and 1,963 sq. ft. of space, which is more than some houses) today.

A natural resource worth preserving:

Panther Valley

1,500 acres of rolling countryside unspoiled by $30 million worth of improvements

Ordinarily much of the money that goes into community development is spent to level the land for the mass production of homes. When the effort is made to preserve the natural beauty of the land and to limit production to a variety of high quality homes—that's news! And that is the story of Panther Valley, quite possibly the last planned residential community of its kind in the greater metropolitan N.Y. area.

Better planning respects the land

Our growing community runs through the unspoiled land as a stream would follow the natural contours. The roads and streets take natural pathways. Homes are built where nature seems to invite their placement, in among the trees, with breathtaking views of the valley and of our golf course sprawling below. As seen from the course, the view is one of rolling hills dense with foliage. What time and nature have created in this poetic setting we are shaping with loving care. We take little away but add much that is in harmony with nature and the needs of people.

Better land is scarce

With spiraling costs and the shortage of attractive land close to the cities, Panther Valley has become something of a phenomenon. Here we have fifteen hundred green acres blessed with the beauty of far away places, that is not far away. But the wonder of it all is that only 40% of Panther Valley land will be developed! And developed with a systems approach to planning that preserves and protects the natural environment.

Better living in every way

What we added increases your enjoyment of what was already here. Year-round sport and leisure facilities: tennis courts for day or night play; swimming pools with a cabana suggestive of the Great Gatsby era; an 18 hole championship golf course; a charming clubhouse with a pro shop; a 200-year old country club where the view from the dining room is a four season joy! These facilities may be enjoyed by residents and non-residents on an annual non-proprietary membership basis to the extent of available capacity.

Custom quality homes

There are a variety of spacious homes and townhomes to choose from at Panther Valley. Their design, material textures and colors are in harmony with the country setting of the community. You'll enjoy the creativity displayed in the model furnishings. And you'll see they are planned for good living. For important moments of privacy there are thoughtful places to be alone, to work in quiet. There are impressive master suites to shut out the world. And there is living space in great, open abundance... welcoming company and evenings of entertainment. There are bright ceramic baths, powder rooms, dressing rooms and walk-in closets. Closets at every turn. And storage space you may have thought had gone out of style. Kitchens, of course are efficiently arranged and charming. What these homes hold is a chance to live life's most satisfying moments to the fullest.

Tenants in Newark Start to Take Over

who holds the title of resident manager, had this to say about a man evicted for trying to avoid paying his rent: "He tried to be three cents slick with us, but we were 10 cents slick."

This program, formally part of the Federal Government's Target Projects Program, under which tenants are grappling with the problems of management, is a relatively new concept in the effort to rescue housing which, though still structurally sound, has declined to a point where traditional management seeks to abandon it.

This was true of Stella Wright, which the Newark Housing Authority had attempted to close. The project had become a scarred, foul-smelling hell hole, breeding, by tenant accounts, violent death, rats and other vermin, pneumonia and other diseases, and hardship and even heart failure among elderly people forced to walk up the stairs of the high-rise project when elevators ceased to function.

But, the theory goes, giving tenants the chief responsibility for operating the run-down dwellings generates a new incentive and, in effect, a new resource—some say the only resource—for revitalization. And the approach is being tried in both the public and private sectors.

In the public sector, the plan was begun in 1969 in St. Louis, spurred by the nation's most monumental failure in public housing—Fruit Igoe. After three years of actual operation, St. Louis's pioneering experiments, by all accounts, are working.

Following the pattern established in St. Louis, a tenant management corporation was formed at Stella Wright. It was made up largely of members of the Stella Wright Tenants Organization, which had led the strike. A board of directors sets policy, hires employees, hears and acts on grievances and other tenant matters. And under the system, the housing authority provides technical advice and serves as the central rent-collection agency and centralized computer and budgetary source.

In the private sector, the term "tenant management" is well established, as applied, for example, to the operation of regular cooperatives. But the concept takes on new meaning as a tool for dealing with private dwellings left by owners who no longer realize profits from them.

In New York City, for example, the problem of such abandonment is not in public housing but in the private sector. One nonprofit, foundation-supported group, the Association of Neighborhood Housing Developers, is actively involved in organizing community groups to take control of buildings when their owners give them up.

The effort appears to experts such as Robert Kolodny, Columbia University professor of urban planning and author of a study on inter-city tenant ownership, as "the only alternative."

Until the Stella Wright residents take full control of their program, a coordinator is technically in charge. His name is Jim Bradley.

Mr. Bradley, a 33-year-old former official of the State Housing Finance Agency, noted that the program at Stella Wright had begun with 404 occupied units, and had now reached 490. He said the goal was occupancy of 1,136 units by April, 1977.

Stella Wright is envisioned as a place providing decent and inexpensive quarters and more—a "community within a community"—offering such amenities as a social program, home management assistance and baby care. Rent averages $60 a month. In addition, the project is giving work to 40 laborers. The total cost of the program is $7.1 million.

At the new Stella Wright, cleanliness is the impression that strikes a visitor who was acquainted with the old Stella Wright. On the development's 17 acres, though they are not yet landscaped as envisioned in the final plans, there is the healthy bustle of renewal. Workmen go about modernizing facilities such as the lobbies, which are being fitted with double doors, 24-hour TV monitors and intercom systems.

"The lobbies used to be dreadful," said Joan Tutler, a building director. "I used to hate going in the lobby—through that ugly green door. Now that my lobby is one that has been redone it really feels like something."

Inside, the halls are devoid of the garbage, the graffiti and the smell of urine that once prevailed. Apartments are being remodeled with new kitchen cabinets and gas ranges, and in the bathrooms new toilets and showers are being installed.

Also, there is a brightness under the new fluorescent lighting, and the walls are now a crisp clean white instead of the former institutional green.

"I love it," said Lillian Lewis, who moved in when the 16-year-old project was new. "But what I really like is this," she said, pointing to a ventilator over the kitchen stove. "It really sucks out the grease," she explained, "although with these white walls, I suppose I'll be using a lot more elbow grease."

The progress of the tenant-management program thus far has been attributed in no small way to a kind of esprit de corps that has developed among participants, reinforced by the knowledge that there is a manager living among them who experiences any and all hardships—at Stella Wright as in St. Louis before it.

"It can be a nuisance, though, when someone calls me at night because their toilet has broken down," the manager of one of St. Louis's five developments in the program said by telephone the other day. But she emphasized that these were little annoyances and that there were no major problems.

There have not been major problems at Stella Wright, either, according to Lynn King, the resident manager, nor has she been overburdened with tenant complaints. Her chief annoyance is what she and others said was an inadequate police presence in the area. "The only time the police respond to a call is when somebody is reported having a gun," she said.

Mrs. King attributed the relative success of the program so far to the high degree of responsibility that her paid aides—14 building directors, floor captains and maintenance clerks—have assumed in running the development.

Joan Tutler, the building director, said that the new peace had come about largely from a hard-won tenant unity, stemming from the days of the rent strike.

"I wore out 15 pairs of shoes," she said of her efforts in the strike. "We still have a few tenants we have to talk to. But there are a few stragglers wherever you go."

Office Building to Become Apartment

Picket's firm, the opportunity afforded by the J-51 program is a welcome one. The company, founded 45 years ago, was active in the postwar period as a general contractor in residential, institutional and commercial building, having erected more than 3,700 dwelling units with a value of more than $100 million in a few years. The company also developed Mitchell-Lama housing for its own account.

Now the Mitchell-Lama program, until a few years ago the mainstay of middle-income housing construction in New York, has come to a halt, a victim of the city and state fiscal crisis that have made impossible the sale of bonds to raise mortgage funds.

At the same time, Federal aid through urban renewal and similar programs has been cut back sharply. Unemployment in the construction field is running at record levels, with as many as 80 percent out of jobs in some skilled trades. Like other employers, Gotham has been hard put to find work in a depressed market.

What the J-51 program does, specifically, is to exempt from property taxes for 12 years any increase in assessed valuation that results from conversion of a nonresidential building into a multiple dwelling, and to further abate the tax on the property each year by 8 1/2 percent of the cost of the renovation. The abatement can amount to 90 percent of the renovation cost and can be taken within a period of from nine to 20 years. The net effect of the combined exemption and abatement is to offset the basic tax for the first 12 years after conversion.

The city's Housing and Development Administration is responsible for certifying that converted properties qualify for the tax benefits. The principal requirements are that apartments in a renovated building contain a minimum average floor area of 1,000 square feet and that the apartments be subjected to rent regulation—New York City rent stabilization or rent control, or Federal supervision under the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

All real estate taxes, water and sewer fees must be paid up, a requirement necessitated by the fact that properties submitted for the J-51 program are expected to include many that have been foreclosed or are otherwise in distress.

Finally, the conversion must be completed within two years, and in any case by Dec. 31, 1978, unless the legislation is extended.

J-51 makes provision for partial conversion of commercial or industrial buildings to residential use, so long as the living space is not beneath the nonresidential area. Owners must also comply with the city's new land-use review procedure when a property is in an area not zoned residential. Approval of the Board of Standards and Appeals is required for a zoning variance, and the appropriate community board must be given an opportunity to hold a public hearing on the conversion.

Developers, while enthusiastic about J-51, point out that there are some difficulties in its application. No building can qualify for the tax advantages until the conversion is completed and the E.D.A. certifies that it meets all requirements. There is no "standby" or advance approval. Some builders have found that this makes it difficult to obtain financing. Lending institutions, which are regarded as lukewarm at best about investing in any but prime locations in the city, are hesitant to commit themselves if there is any question of a project's qualifying or meeting the two-year deadline.

Whatever its shortcomings, J-51 has served during its brief life as a powerful catalyst. It has led to the recent formation of a consortium to regenerate older buildings, a group that includes architects, a mortgage and construction company, an engineering and management people, a consortium, Teitelbaum Holdings, began conversion of a 12-story building at 159 Madison Avenue, northeast corner of 32d Street, 119-unit apartment building.

Like 244 Madison Avenue, blocks to the north, the 32d building was vacated by a tenant, General Electric. The building was not foreclosed, but the owner entered into a joint venture to recycle the building for occupancy. According to David Teitelbaum, head of the developer, the renovated building will cost $3 million.

Among the consortium's members are Richard Ravitch, chairman of Construction Corporation, who built a number of large residential developments in the city; M. Mitty, an architect who was former chairman of the Board of Standards and Appeals; Robert Bell, a lawyer, in real-property law; Jerome of the Sonnenblick-Goldman firm, and Robert Korn of the J. Lor management firm.

The purpose of the consortium is to bring together a team that, through a conversion from occupation to management operation. In this respect, it differs from many of the entrepreneurs in the program, because one of the attractive features to other developers is their ability to complete their work in a relatively short time, which the apartments can be over to a company that will be building, freeing the builder in another project.

News of the Realty Trade

Assemblage Broken Up

Tishman Realty & Construction Co. has sold the last three properties in a block-square assemblage that had been painstakingly put together in a joint venture with Arlen Properties for a major office project in the east midtown area but that became a casualty of the overbuilt market in Manhattan commercial space.

The properties, two 10-story apartment buildings at 146 and 150 East 49th Street and a six-story apartment house with an adjoining 3,000-square-foot parking lot at 155 East 48th Street, were to have been torn down to make way for a new headquarters for the General Telephone and Electronics Corporation. Tishman and Arlen acquired, through outright ownership or leasehold, control of the entire block bounded by Lexington and Third Avenues, 48th and 49th Streets.

G. T. & E. eventually decided to leave town, erecting its own headquarters in Stamford, Conn. A major reason for its move was the difficulty experienced by Tishman and Arlen in trying to relocate residential tenants from the three apartment buildings and the Shelton Hotel, also on the block.

Subsequent deals looking toward new construction on the site also fell through. Tishman relinquished its control over the other properties, including the Shelton, which is now in the hands of the Dollar Savings Bank.

The three apartment buildings sold for $675,000 in cash to Sorkin and Paul Maslin. Invesplan to renovate the buildings.

School Buys Town

The six-story townhouse a 71st Street, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, has been bought by Gordon Gray Jr. for including mortgages of $411 school has moved into the from its former home at 112 Street, which has been sold to Hill Hospital. Both sales were through Sylvia K. French of Elliman-Gibbons & Ives.

Under Construction Now... THE COMMON In Greenwich

Come to The Common. Come to a Special Way of Living.

Here at The Common in Greenwich the great old idea of the neighborhood is coming to life again. So much of today's condominium housing is attractive only to one particular group, but The Common appeals to young couples, singles, grandparents, small families of all ages.

Features: The buildings — of friendly weathered wood, superbly built — will fit the rolling land which is held in common. The units are the last word in modern design, ranging in size from one-room efficiencies to two-bedroom plans. Both duplex and one-floor units are available, each with state entry and its own private deck or patio. Air-conditioning and gas hot water heat.

The landscaping, the ponds, the old trees and stone walls will make The Common a green oasis for a special way of living.

Location: On East Putnam Avenue (Boston Post Road, U.S. 1) Greenwich's main thoroughfare, The Common is three blocks from Exit 5 of the Connecticut Turnpike, Interstate 95; a scant mile from downtown shopping. Inter-city buslines stop at the property, so that even the no-car family can get around with ease.

Price range: $43,000 to $70,000 including all appliances, wall-to-wall carpeting. Low Greenwich taxes. Come stake your claim in The Common! First occupancy March 77.

Housing Politics: It Hits Where You Live

ature, both in the primary campaigns that ended last Sept. 14 and in the campaigns now under way for the general election next Nov. 2.

In the 47th Assembly District in Bensonhurst, opposing housing interests directly clashed in the recent Democratic party primary. The key figure in that race was Assemblyman Frank J. Barbaro, who successfully sought re-election in the overwhelmingly Democratic district, and thus virtually guaranteed himself re-election to a third term in Albany.

In his two terms in the Legislature, Mr. Barbaro has emerged as a leading proponent of tenant interests. He has championed such causes as stronger rent controls and more vigorous government action against apartment owners who do not provide maintenance and services. And he has worked closely with tenant organizations.

Where Mr. Barbaro rates with landlords was illustrated by the comment of William A. Moses, chairman of the Community Housing Improvement Program, a major New York City owners' group. "We're looking for that guy's neck," Mr. Moses declared.

While housing and rent issues were not the only ones involved in Mr. Barbaro's primary race against Douglas A. Milazzo—Mr. Barbaro was opposed by the Brooklyn Democratic organization because of his organization-bucking stance in general—they were clearly matters of importance.

Those aiding Mr. Barbaro's campaign included tenant activists such as Jack Aronowitz, chairman of the Bensonhurst Tenants Council.

Among those helping Mr. Milazzo was the Political Action Committee for Better Housing, a fund-raising group made up largely of property owners and their representatives, which provided Mr. Milazzo with campaign funds. Mr. Moses (besides his position with the Community Housing Improvement Program, is a board member of the five-year-old Political Action Committee) declined to say how much the campaign contribution was, and Mr. Milazzo described it as "small."

In addition, according to another member of the Political Action Committee, its volunteers helped distribute Mr. Milazzo's campaign literature. Some building superintendents were also used in this endeavor as well as to "take down Barbaro's literature," this committee member said.

Mr. Milazzo said that if Political Action Committee representatives distributed his literature or interfered with Mr. Barbaro's, "it was without my knowledge."

Mr. Moses was reluctant to say who else the Political Action Committee was aiding this year. "If our name goes on as helping someone, that's the death knell for him, especially in this city," he said.

But over-all, across the state, the committee aided about 10 primary candidates this year and expects to assist 20 to 30 legislative candidates in the general election, he said.

In the 70th Assembly District in Manhattan, covering parts of the Upper West Side and Harlem, tenant activists were also prominently involved in the primary, but without the kind of unity they exhibited in the Barbaro race.

In a seven-way contest, Marie M. Runyon—a Democrat who herself first came to public notice as a tenant and rent-strike activist—was seeking re-nomination to a second term in the Assembly.

Under the banner of "Tenants for Marie Runyon," tenant leaders from across the state, including Assemblyman Barbaro, endorsed her as "an articulate and forceful supporter of tenant legislation." Michael McKee, chairman of the New York State Tenants Coalition, was her co-campaign manager.

But other tenant activists felt differently. An editorial in a local paper published by the Columbia Tenants Union called Mrs. Runyon a "discredited opportunist legislator" who has been "grandly telling us to fill up more buses on futile all-day trips to stand around in Albany paying court to legislators."

Some activists banded together under "Tenants for Diana Lacey," one of Mrs. Runyon's opponents.

More than just housing issues were involved in the contest, which reflected the fractionalization often characteristic of the area's Democratic politics.

But the split in the tenant ranks could hardly have helped Mrs. Runyon. She finished a close third, behind Edward C. Sullivan, the winner, and Miss Lacey. Mrs. Runyon and Miss Lacey are challenging the results in court.

On the East Side of Manhattan, in the 28th State Senate district from 14th Street to the 90s, the Democratic candidate, Mr. Spitz, is taking the highly untraditional step of calling, in an area heavy with apartment renters, for phase-out of all rent controls.

At stake is the seat held by Mr. Goodman, a four-term State Senator with mayoral ambitions. He is one of the most visible legislators and chairman of the Senate Committee on Housing and Urban Development. Mr. Spitz would be the underdog in any case, and his rent-control stand is hardly likely to better his chances.

Mr. Spitz feels differently. "A lot of tenants, when I've spoken to them and explained my full program, have been sympathetic," he said. "They realize I might be foolish politically, but they feel I'm doing the right thing."

Mr. Spitz holds that rent controls have discouraged investment in housing to a disastrous degree, and that phasing out control and stabilization programs over five to seven years—he prefers to call it "phasing in a free market"—would spur "a revival of interest in building."

At the same time, Mr. Spitz says, "nobody should pay more than 25 percent of income for rent if we can avoid it." Thus, he says, any phase-out of controls must be accompanied by rent subsidies and tax abatements to assist low- and moderate-income tenants who could not afford the rents that would accompany a phase-out of controls.

Senator Goodman—who is assailed as "pro-tenant" by many owners, and who last spring cosponsored an unsuccessful bill that would have expanded and strengthened rent regulations even while streamlining their administration—scoffed at Mr. Spitz's proposal.

"Where will he get the rent subsidies? I've been trying to get them for years," the Senator said, insisting that if Mr. Spitz's proposal was "contingent on subsidies, it's mythological."

Mr. Goodman said that an owner "should receive an economic rent on the basis of which he can keep up the building, provide proper services to tenants and make a fair return," and he called the present rent laws an "administrative disgrace."

"But as long as we have a vacancy rate of less than 5 percent, and as long as we are unable to obtain government housing and rent subsidies, it would be brutally unfair to throw them into a wholly unregulated, free-market rent situation," he said.

The two candidates also disagree on property-tax assessment policies. Mr. Spitz urges that "all property in an assessing jurisdiction be assessed at the same fraction of market value—in Manhattan, property is assessed at double the ratio in Queens, Brooklyn and Staten Island."

Mr. Goodman responds that while the current assessing system "needs a complete overhaul," Mr. Spitz's approach would cause skyrocketing taxes on one- and two-family dwellings everywhere and would drive middle-class homeowners from the city.

In the meantime, in the statewide race between Senator Buckley and Mr. Moynihan, housing and other real estate-related issues have certainly not stood out.

"One of the problems in a campaign," Mr. Buckley said, "is that you respond to what reporters ask you. They've been asking about the economy and jobs, and this [housing and realty matters] hasn't been front and center." Nonetheless, tucked among the views of both candidates on a wide range of issues are those involving housing and real estate.

Mr. Moynihan, the Democratic challenger, urges Government programs to provide for "rehabilitation and improvement of the existing housing stock, as well as for new housing." The Government "could be especially useful in insuring bank loans for building maintenance and improvement in neighborhoods in danger of deterioration," he says.

Abolishing rent control in New York, Mr. Moynihan insists, "would create immeasurable dislocation and hardship for millions. We should improve the present law, which has been a clumsy instrument for shielding tenants from the effects of the housing shortage."

Senator Buckley, the Conservative Republican, also wants a greater emphasis on policies to protect the existing housing stock, and he suggests such steps as Federal mortgage loans to enable renters to buy their own units as cooperatives or condos.

He also cites his sponsorship of an unsuccessful bill that would have given apartment owners Federal income-tax deductions for a portion of their rent that they then would use to buy their own local property.

The Senator's formal stance on rent control may be best illustrated by his comments on the issue in the Senate race. During the housing abandonment to "be considered rent control policy," Buckley declares that "only the City can remove the artificiality that have destroyed so much of the city's housing tax base."

In fact, the New York State ment could also end rent control in New York City or in any other having them in the state.

Real estate interests actually it so unlikely that New York ever act to end controls that it increasingly turned to the state ment in search of relief.

Spitz: Return to Free Market

Construction of new apartment houses in New York City is at the lowest level since 1932, the depth of the depression, and existing units available for rental purposes are steadily deteriorating. In consequence, it is urgent that the New York State Legislature, when it convenes in January, adopt a fresh comprehensive approach toward housing in the Metropolitan area.

In my opinion, a cornerstone of any new program for restoring investor confidence in new construction and proper maintenance of existing stock is a clear and firm signal by the Legislature of a return to a free market economy with respect to rental housing. This means phasing out rent controls over a five-to-seven-year period.

A significant increase in the flow of available mortgage money for new building and maintenance during that period should result in a satisfactorily competitive rental market at the time controls are finally removed.

On the surface, political prospects for phasing out New York City rent regulations appear difficult. But I find that many tenants are becoming more willing to listen to arguments against the current system of controls, particularly when the phase-out is proposed as part of an over-all housing program that might well provide a much needed boost to New York City's lagging economy.

Furthermore, tenants are becoming more conscious of inequities in a regulatory system that provides one renter in a controlled building with an apartment costing, say, $310 a month, while the occupant of similar unit pays merely $180.

In drawing up a comprehensive plan for reviving housing activity in New York City, including the phase-out of controls necessary for inspiring investor confidence, it is vital that renters be made aware of some of the beneficial aspects to them of a return to a free market economy.

Take Manhattan, as a case in point, where a large number of lofts, obsolete office buildings, and single-occupancy hotels may be converted into new attractive apartments at a cost of $12,000 to $20,000 per unit. Under New York City's J-51 program of tax abatements and exemptions, these apartments could rent, optimistically, from $215 a month, and more conservatively in the range of $230 to $240 a month.

Of course, some prospective renters, particularly the elderly, will find it difficult to meet these rent levels. This problem can be dealt with through an expansion of available funds under Section 8 of the National Housing and Community Development Act of 1974.

Indeed, if there is to be a completely successful return to a free market economy in housing, the elderly and low-income working families must be treated with understanding during the period of transfer. This can be done through liberalization and expansion of present programs of tax abatements, now restricted to the elderly, plus judicious use of subsidies.

But other tenant activists felt differently. An editorial in a local paper published by the Columbia Tenants Union called Mrs. Runyon a "discredited opportunist legislator" who has been "grandly telling us to fill up more buses on futile all-day trips to stand around in Albany paying court to legislators."

Goodman: A Glimmer of Hope

Landlords and tenants are preparing for Armageddon in Albany on the issue of rent controls, scheduled to expire next June. This year's confrontation promises to be the most intense ever, with both landlords and tenants caught between rising costs and decreasing real income, and with state and city treasuries depleted. The future of the middle class in our city and perhaps the very future of our city itself are at stake.

The arguments are varied but boil down to one basic problem: landlords need more money and tenants can't afford to pay what landlords want to charge. Landlords cite rising costs of energy, taxes, labor and capital as proof of the need for higher rents, while tenants cite income and cost-of-living statistics to prove they can't afford to pay the increases.

Unless the issue is resolved, tens of thousands of sound housing units will inevitably enter the cycle of neglect, decay and abandonment if income falls to pay necessary costs. Our landlords, our tenants, and our city cannot afford the loss of these apartments or those who rent them.

In previous years the two sides of the argument appeared to be irreconcilable, but there has arisen an important glimmer of hope and reason from within the two contesting camps. Recently, rational landlord and tenant leaders have spoken out to counsel the legislature to take a new road, one marked by guidelines to help the tenants, the landlords and the city to survive. Among the most notable of the suggested guideposts are:

- Relief for both sides from the strangulation of red tape and conflicting information.
- A requirement that needed repairs be made and essential services be maintained.
- A new balanced state regulatory agency to enforce the rent laws in an unbiased fashion.

Regulation only where the laws of supply and demand cause the shortage of measured by low vacancy.

Rent regulations to provide "economic rent" sufficient to cover actual maintenance and expenses, taxes, reasonable for vacancies, repairs and maintenance, a return on capital debt service, and a fair equity.

Provisions to encourage maintenance and upgrading of buildings.

Special protection for needy citizens.

I believe that the future of is inexorably tied to our ability to solve sound housing at a reason for those who wish to live in our city. This issue is too important to be decided on mere political to either landlords or tenants sensible guidelines prevail, on people and its investors can hope of a fair and equitable rent system that serves not any or interest group, but the good of ...lofty grandstand. An auspicious start, but let's focus for a minute on wife. Valerie sitting in her reclining seat and nibbling at her in-flight luncheon (roast stuffed chicken, salad, chocolate cream cake, and a mint green Liberty Bell wrapped in red-white-and-blue foil), thumbing through her T.W.A. World of Gifts Catalog (headlined "America Has Gone Acrylic!"), and featuring acrylic napkin rings, bunny pajamas, desk mats, clipboards and soap dishes), with her ears plugged into Channel 6 of her stethoscope for a "Happy Birthday, U.S.A." program. Right now, she's hearing the late Senator Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois doing "The Story of the Flag and the Star-Spangled Banner." ...Sounds tacky as can be, but let me tell you, the meal was first-rate and so was that audio program. Neither was bland. In addition to Senator Dirksen conjuring up moving word pictures with utter sincerity as well as extremeunction and John Wayne muttering "Face the Flag, Son," there were some numbers that were considered left-wing, maybe even taboo, when we left L.B.J.'s Great Society less than a decade ago: The Weavers singing "This Land is Your Land" and "Eric Canal" ...and Brock Peters replacing the late Paul Robeson on that controversial oldie, "Ballad for Americans" ("Man in white skin cannot be free/ When his black brother is in clay-ve-ree"). Amid all this massaging of Valerie's senses and ideals, happy tears came to her eyes and she spoke up: "I wish we lived in America. Everything and everyone is so nice." ...I was not totally surprised to hear

...this—even from a teacher who'd just signed another three-year contract to work in Vienna. She and I were responding not just to our airborne coddling but to a week in our native New York. This was my eighth return visit; my hairin comes over only on Val's home leaves. The first seven times, I detected deterioration from visit to visit. This time, though, all four of us detected measurable improvement—in Manhattan, at least. In seven days, not one of us stepped into any dog leavings. Every pay phone we tried worked. People were civilized, even courteous. When I pointed this out to various New Yorkers, some of them said it was just coincidence or else sprucing up for the Democratic convention. Whatever the reason, we were impressed. ...Now, confronted by airborne euphoria, I started to reason with Val, but I was interrupted by a yelp from daughter Erika across the aisle: "Mommy! Daddy! They're singing about me!" Tuning in our headsets, we broke the news to her that the song Lawrence Welk's chorus and orchestra were doing was not called "I'm Erika the Beautiful." When calm was restored, Val looked at me helpfully and said: "See how out-of-touch we've let them become." The children chimed in. They wanted to live in a land where there are more than two TV channels and only a dozen flavors of ice cream. I asked them, "How much can you watch at one time?" and "How many can you eat at once?" And I told them the old Jewish joke about the dead man who shopped around and chose hell over heaven because it was so ...much livelier. But when he moved in, he was appalled by the heat and stench of the place and remarked to Satan that it didn't seem this way at yesterday's bacchanal. "Yesterday," said Satan, "you were a tourist." ...But enough about us! Let me tell you about you, based on an odyssey that ranged over New York, Chicago, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Las Vegas, Washington, Boston and a dozen points in between. ...Americans are still as good as their word. For nine years, people who have looked us up in Europe have been saying, "You must come visit us." In May, after pinpointing locations and people

How to Get in The Swim, Afloat

By BARBARA DUBIVSKY

As I walked up the gangplank, I kept telling myself how much I was looking forward to spending my days curled up in a deck chair reading my way through a half dozen or more books, lifting my head now and then to watch as the whitecaps of the northern waters slowly gave way to the blue stillness of the southern seas, taking time out only for meals and an occasional stroll around the deck.

Of course, I was lying to myself. What I really hoped was never to make it through a single chapter. That first cruise would be a success only if, like Bette Davis in "Now, Voyager," I became part of all the fun and games. Remember how all the chic people on board vied for Bette's company, how she never lacked for dancing partners, how she landed Paul Henreid? Never mind that he turned out to be something of a neurotic; he was charmingly attentive during the cruise, and that was all she—or I—could reasonably expect.

But what hope, I wondered, did a run-of-the-deck passenger without an obliging script writer in tow have of winning friends, influencing crew and generally feeling at ease aboard ship? Quite a lot, actually, as I was to learn during the course of a dozen or so cruises, aided and abetted by advice from travel agents, ship's captains, cruise directors and some of my fellow passengers.

It was on that first trip that I inadvertently stumbled onto a sure-fire way to plunge into the social swim and stay securely afloat: Give a party the first night out. The well-wishers who came to see me off were a gregarious bunch who invited passengers in the cabins next to and across from mine to join our bon voyage festivities. After the ship sailed, I asked my newly found friends back to finish off the remaining goodies. Everyone repaid my impromptu hospitality sometime during the cruise, and since each of them met someone I didn't know, my circle expanded rapidly.

For the socially inclined, certain inhibitions should be left on the dock. For example, try making the first overture. It works. If the people in your passageway don't look promising, reach out to others: that couple standing next to you at the rail tossing confetti overboard as the ship pulls away from the pier; the kindly gentleman who offers to help adjust your camera for a picture of the crew hauling in the ropes; the woman in front of you in line for table reservations.

Tablemates can make or break a voyage—you'll spend more time with them than almost anyone else. So plan carefully. You can almost always get the sitting of your choice. There are two: bingo players and people with children tend to eat earlier than those who enjoy the cocktail hour and/or late-night revelries. As to your tablemates, here the luck of the draw pretty much prevails, though some lines will make an effort to honor a request to be seated with people of like interests and comparable age. Make your preferences known when you book passage, remembering that the bigger the table, the better chance you have of a good mix. (You might also try for a spot toward the center of the room; the roll of the ship is less noticeable there, a consideration at mealtime.) Reconfirm your table reservations as soon as you board and then make sure you get down to the dining salon early for the first meal. People generally stay put at the place they take for that first repast, so it's important to position yourself carefully. Stand idly about for a few minutes admiring the décor, the place settings, whatever. When enough of your tablemates have shown up for you to guess at who the most promising conversationalists might be, move swiftly. If you guess wrong, suggest changing places—for each meal, "so that we can get to know each other better without having to shout across the table." If the whole table disappoints, consult with the maître d'hôtel about a change of table. (It won't hurt to leave $5 or $10 in his palm after you make your pitch.) A change of sitting is usually possible, but beware: different meal schedules can put a crimp in a developing relationship. Instant status at sea comes by assignment to the captain's table. Some ships still place people there on a permanent basis, with the selection made at a pre-sailing trade-off between the master of the ship (who often must endure social misfits) and the passenger agent (who must oblige the well connected). But many shipping lines now change the composition of the table daily. Either way, only V.I.P.'s of one kind or another generally make it. But you can try. A colleague of mine who does magic tricks was invited once to serve as an ice-breaker at a captain's table. So if your social ambitions lie that way, make your qualifications, whatever they might be, known to your travel agent, the maître d', the captain's steward (who knows everything about everyone) or the purser.

Not everyone, however, considers dining with the captain the ultimate. One passenger on whom many attentions had been showered gratefully acknowledged all but one of them in her thank-you note; as to the captain's table, she said, she didn't enjoy eating with "the help." Some captains turn the table by refusing to dine with passengers under any circumstances, preferring the company of their staff officers, or even the solitary splendor of their private quarters, with the excuse that weather conditions demand ready access to the bridge. (Not that they are hermits; many a good-looking woman has been invited to a captain's cabin for pre- or post-dinner drinks, and group cocktail parties are part of a captain's prescribed entertaining.)

The ship's paper, slipped under your door each morning before breakfast, provides a roundup of world news and a list of the day's activities. Singles, in particular, should look in on every activity at least once, including the lifeboat drills, where a certain enforced togetherness prevails.

Never, however, go to the dining room for lunch; you will only see the

The No.1 way to Barbados.

Before you spend a week in Barbados this winter, spend a while with your Travel Agent this week:

Pick the right package. Pick the right price. And pick the right airline.

- 1) Barbados offers almost anything you could want. So American offers dozens of vacations there. All backed by the American Airlines' Tour Warranty.
- 2) We've spent years planning the best 8 days and 7 nights of your life. And we'll help you spend them at a price you can afford:

from Dec. 15 to Apr. 15, only $140 to $622 per person, double occupancy, plus air fare, meals, taxes, and hotel service charge.

3) No one offers lower fares than we do either.

So now that you can almost picture yourself relaxing on those sunny beaches, make sure you don't weaken. Pick the right airline!

In a recent independent survey of its members, the Airline Passengers Association named American "the number one choice for domestic travel." And the number one reason? "Service." So why settle for less to Barbados? Fly American. And let us show you what we do best.

We're American Airlines. Doing what we do best.

The Airline Passengers Association is an independent membership organization. For a copy of the survey, write APA, Box 2758, Dallas, Texas 75221.

The Family Levy Comes Home for a Seven-Week Bicentennial Swi

we thought we'd find congenial, I sent out 14 letters asking potential hosts if their offers still stood and, if so, would they be there on the following dates in July and August? Within a fortnight, I had 14 replies, all in the enthusiastic affirmative. Later we learned that one host family deferred a trip to Europe by a day because we were coming, while another pair interrupted a vacation in Rehoboth Beach, Del., to entertain us in Washington, D.C.

Our hosts fed us well, the cuisine ranging from vegetarian lasagna on the Pacific Coast to strip steaks char-broiled outdoors in Marblehead, Mass. And by insisting upon taking our hosts out to a restaurant of their choice on our last night with them, we also discovered at least half-a-dozen first-rate, reasonably priced eating places.

For us, the West began in Denver, where we found the Far East entrenched at 1561 Market Street. Two young Japanese brides, Kazuko Johnson and Nobuko Schwab, have established the Kabuki Restaurant in a rundown part of town where an occasional vagrant staggers in demanding a shot and leaves sheepishly without disrupting the harmony.

Three summers ago, when I was in Japan, a skin magazine cabled me to "put a new wrinkle on the geisha story for us." Many thousand yen of multi-splendored research established, alas, that the only wrinkles were on the geisha herself; she was largely a pudding-faced middle-aged biddy who, for $40 an evening, would interrupt any sustained conversation with her music or some insipid chatter. This summer, in downtown Denver, I discovered not only the best Japanese food I've eaten in the United States, but the first real geisha evening of my life.

Kazuko, with the face of a porcelain figurine, serviced five tables while her partner Nobuko took four or five more. Kneeling beside us, pouring, refilling, chatting, crooning to our kids and taking everything in, Kazuko was a well-traveled, charming conversationalist about every subject that arose. And the Kabuki (where the most elaborate meal with a plum wine aperitif won't cost you more than $10 each) was an oasis of gentle femininity in a city still close enough to pioneer hardness that its women tend to talk in the deep voices of men.

Living next door to Hungary, I had to come all the way to the Csárdás Restaurant in Columbia, Calif., to discover that there's a better Hungarian red wine than Egri Bikavér (Bull's Blood of Eger)—a Burgundy called Villány—and to eat the best stuffed cabbage I've ever tasted ($4.85 for a complete dinner). That's the good news. The bad news is that my wife says she won't make her stuffed cabbage for me now that I've expressed myself, even though she agrees. And the worst news is that you'd better check before going: the Csárdás may go out of business before the Bicentennial year is over.

We went to a steak-fry by a stream near the gateway to Rocky Mountain National Park in Colorado. We were staying a Thursday night at Aspen Lodge near Estes Park, where our $20-a-person cottage included three hearty meals, and owner-chef Joe Droesser cooked steaks that tasted of steak, not charcoal, while his wife, Amalie, dished out fresh-baked apple cake. Then a waiter took up a guitar and we all sang "You Are My Sunshine" and "Blue-Tail Fly." With aspen trees and Longs Peak overhead, the senses came sweepingly uncluttered. "Oh You Beautiful Doll" and "There are Smiles That Make You Happy" were on the marvelously misprinted song sheets Joe and Amalie passed around, but the guitarist didn't know the tunes. Two older couples—pink-cheeked pairs of strangers until then—sang them in perfect harmony, teaching the golden oodles to him and us. Then the waiter and the rest of us all sang "Where Have All the Flowers Gone?" As with the headset on the airplane, I felt the absence of polarization and politicization. I also felt reconciliation: the generations and the regions sitting around the campfire singing their songs to and with each other. And I felt a twinge of alarm as we concluded with "When the Saints Go Marching In" and the clearest voice was my wife's singing that Lord, she wants to be in that number when the New World is revealed.

America is a banquet of museums. In Chicago, the Museum of Science and Industry held us spellbound with its submarine, coal mine and Food for Life hall, where we watched chickens hatching and had personalized calorie counts and conversations with a computer about our nutrition. In the museum's Hall of Communications, we found a touring "Scientific Siberia" show, complete with stolid Soviet guides and a scowling blowup of Lenin. For this we had to come all the way from Eastern Europe!

The dark brown medieval fortress exterior of the Denver Art Museum belies the light, airy, wide open spaces inside, where the American Indian collection is highly recommended. And the Wine Museum of San Francisco is an oasis in the dreary honky-tonk that Fisherman's Wharf has become. Even though no beverages are served, an hour or two spent in the Wine Museum—with its enchanting Bacchus Corner, Franz W. Sichel glass collection and "Thomas Jefferson and Wine" exhibit (through 1976)—is almost as refreshing as killing a bottle of California champagne.

On our first night in Washington, D.C., we visited the Smithsonian Institution's new National Air and Space Museum, having been told that evening was the least crowded time. (The hours now are 10 A.M. to 5:30 P.M.) Arriving shortly before 8, we didn't have to ask, "Which way to the Mona Lisa?" type questions. The two most famous showpieces, piloted by the Wright Brothers and Lindbergh, dangle overhead when you stand in the main lobby. (You can also take an escalator and gaze down on them.)

After touching the obligatory black blob of moon rock, we were free to browse. I gravitated to Gallery 211, "Flight and the Arts." Much of it was ordinary (a 1975-model, sepia portrait of Lindbergh; Norman Rockwell mythologizing a couple of astronauts suiting up), but not a superbly displayed Richard Lippold sun sculpture and a Rowland Emmett mixed-media creation called MAUD (Manually Assisted Universal Deviator), a cycle made for moon-pedaling by one Prof. Leo Capricorn, including zodiac wheel, a pan for sweeping up moon dust and a cheese-sorter.

The museum high point for all of us, however, was the Boston Children's Museum and an exhibit there called "What If I Couldn't?" about many kinds of handicaps. We tried out wheelchairs, casts, braces and crutches, realizing for the first time the strength and physical effort it takes to be crippled. With our eyes tightly covered, we took a "Blind Walk" which was hairier than any amusement-park ride. With mirror vision, we tried to write b and d on a reflecting slate. With various visual and aural devices, we "heard" through the eyes and ears of the deaf. With smelly socks as hand puppets, we acted out psychological skits for "What to Do When You're Angry," "When You Feel Sad" and "When You See a Psychiatrist." It was a vicarious round trip to everyone's occasional fantasy or fear.

Our host in Colorado, Frank Oppenheimer, is 71, but he thought nothing of driving us 50 miles from Parker to Colorado Springs for "Breakfast at the Broadmoor" Hotel ($5.50 for strawberries in double cream, two eggs poached on artichoke bottoms with spinach, Hollandaise and truffles, plus, for another $1.50, Bananas Foster flamed at your table) or 80 miles in the opposite direction to the Chuckwagon Dinner Playhouse in Greeley to catch an almost-first-rate Bicentennial production of "George M!" And Frank wasn't doing this entirely for us. A fortnight earlier, Frank (who fled Hitler and his native Germany in the 1930's) and his wife, Gladys, drove there to partake of the roast beef buffet and "The Diary of Anne Frank."

On our way back to Parker, past midnight with the kids sleeping on our shoulders, I murmured to my wife that if we were to return to live in America we'd need a car, probably two. In Vienna, where we live quite happily without even one, the 55-cent public transport works and city living is hve-

ble. We don't like to drive. And neither of us likes the way the other drives.

America's long-distance public transport worked unexpectedly well for us as tourists. Despite crowded airports, our five flights on T.W.A. were impeccably punctual. T.W.A.'s food, however, deteriorated as we went west—and one piece of our luggage arrived nastily stained in Denver; the airline will pay for the cleaning. Our three flights on Eastern, one on Western, and another on Allegheny were almost as punctual (never more than 10 minutes late), but our luggage took 25 minutes to appear after flights on Western and Allegheny.

Amtrak was a joy on the West Coast and a disaster in the East. Thanks to a family plan that's no longer in effect between Boston and New York, our 350-mile train trip through California from Salinas to Glendale cost the same as our 233-mile ordeal from Boston's South Station to Pennsylvania Station. And what a difference in value received!

The Coast Starlight, traveling 1,364 miles from Seattle to Los Angeles, was on time; an immaculate, amply staffed, all-reserved-seat train about which my only complaint is that it was a well-kept secret. From Monterey, I called the number listed for the Salinas depot. When it didn't answer, I tried again. This time, an operator interrupted to give me an 800 number to call. When I did, another operator came on to tell me a new 800 number. This one was answered by a man who asked where I was calling from. When I told him Monterey, he said: "We don't go there." Before he could hang up on me, I persuaded him to reserve four seats from Salinas, but I wonder how many non-natives could hang in there that long.

Each couple of coaches on the Coast Starlight had a porter to help with bags and seating. When the conductor came, he had the whole car grinning in seconds. Glancing at our tickets, he said: "Glendale? Where's that?" As Casey Stengel roared in his grave, I replied: "You'll find out when we stop there." "Today's Tuesday," he bantered back. "We don't stop there on Tuesdays."

The porter told us there was a counter car five minutes' walk behind ours (with $2.25 specials) and a dining car 10 minutes' walk back, behind the observation car, with $3.75 luncheons. In the diner, for that good price, I enjoyed my scalone (scaloped abalone, two slabs) with salad, string beans, mashed potatoes, iced tea and a choice of desserts that included apple pie or chocolate sundae. The rest of my family had good words for their hamburger platters and baked chicken luncheon. Judging by all this and a similar experience I had with a $4 Great Lake trout dinner on the Denver Zephyr two years ago, Amtrak food west of Chicago is cheaper, more indigenous and far better than railroad food was a dozen years ago back East. The gentlemanly waiter on the Coast Starlight, Mr. R. Martin, answered our every "thank you" with "my pleasure" and, when I gave him my American Express card at the end of the meal, he said: "Mr. Levy, it's been a real pleasure serving you and your family today."

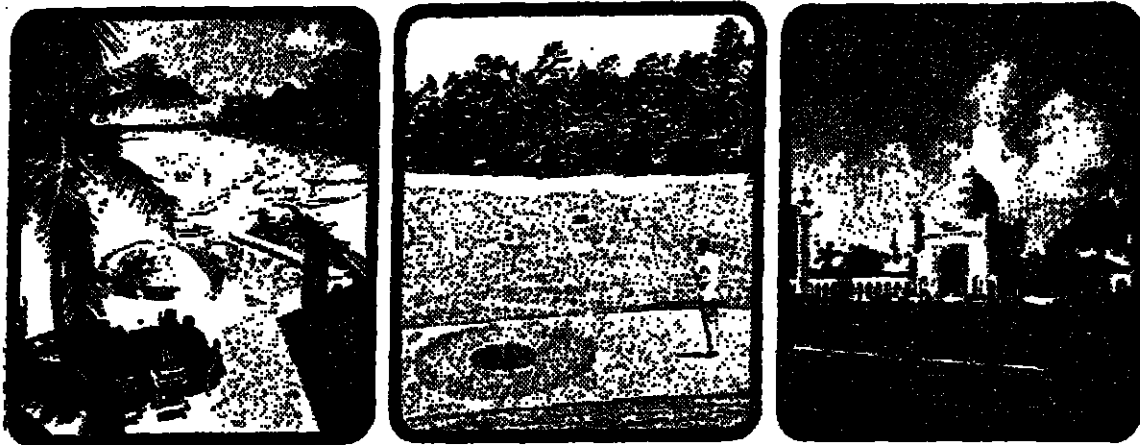

A month later, in the Boston graveyard that used to be South Station, we boarded the Washington-bound Senator for New London, Conn., our stopover on our final leg to New York. The train—which mediocre counter cars—led but was 30 minutes late. An hour-and-four-minute late conductor, his mouth in permanent sneer, turned it, as he took our four tickets, the four of us: "Where's your yousse?"

It was also on the East we had our only unhappy experience. On the Short Line from N. Y. to Binghamton scheduled two-hour journey, behind the wheel of his "No Smoking" sign, an ic white-haired Yankee chain-smoked all the way, ing his coughs with cuss we could have stayed on; we switched in Binghamton hound for the rest of o Rochester.

I am here to tell you, after on both coasts, that Greyhound ca still works. Some of hounds left late, but all arrived early. In fact, when toozengers showed up for the San Jose to Monterey, we into an extra section that wily nonstop and arrived ahead of schedule. Unfortunately luggage had gone on the bus. As the freeways ribbon Greyhound express buses, better for sightseeing than the 10:15 A.M. local bus. Francisco to Manteca, Escalante, Soulsbyville, Ralphs, Solonme, Twain Harte, In Strawberry and Pinecrest, Cised better views. But it is

Secretaries

One recent Wednesday, 130 jobs were under the special secretaries heading of the Classified Pages of The New York Times. More secretarial jobs appear under listings such as "Legal secretary," "Medical secretary" and "Executive secretary." And you'll find secretarial jobs in the Employment Agencies listings, too.

late and every bit as homoge- as any air flight. The bus wasn't in from the garage when the announcements were proclaimed 10:05 that it was "ready for loading at Platform 34"; "final call" at 10:10, and "last call" at 10:15. At that point, I perceived a person behind me bawling information while telling my family to save my own line. I went over and asked when the bus was coming from 34. Just the way they do, she looked at her watch and said "It's left." Ten minutes later, and—easily made up the time in the two-and-a-half-hour run.

There is three miles from the town- recovery of our trip for anyone with kids—Columbia State Park, a preserved and recorded Gold Rush town in Bret Harter-Train territory. Closed off to Columbia's three-block Main is said to be where "High Noon" met. In any event, it is so over-ly authentic that, every time I see our host, Sy Kahn, at the end of Main Street, I felt a con-stant was coming—and, hands on and I would lapse into bow-ery Cooper swaggers. Main offers enough attractions for you in town for two hours days. Among them are a work-ship where you can have your name stamped on a one for 75 cents; Nelson's Candy Kitchen, which pur-poses to be "the last candy shop in town to hand-dip chocolates"; and the 111-year-old tinseltown par-ty is only on its third year. A tinseltown worked there 65 years. A cost $2.50 ("Bald-Head Spots") and in back of the store-keepers' boxes, an important service in earlier times. Vis-itors also can go behind the owner's cabin.

can take a 10-minute Wells stagecoach ride for $1 if you ride; $1.25 if you ride shotgun, of us did, beside the driver, as a bored college kid sucking from a plastic cup and ad-vertising his four-horse team with com-ments that sounded like "Pat-ty Five minutes along the trail, he held up by a masked bandit (backpack, just as these as the with whom he alternates roles. He on like a customs officer with anything of value, Mister?" But responded in kind by offering a ballpoint pen, the red bandana in mouth began to twitch and a little. "Th-that isn't worth in out-th-things-ways," he said, riding off thataway. "Shoot the passengers inside shouted, fighter Erica, riding shotgun, too, her camera on him.

reason d'être in Columbia is also main reason to go there in the July and August season: the Fal-aise Theater, built in the 1850's, summer home of the University Pacific Players, with whom we're in love on two of their State-ment-sponsored visits to Viena. In successive nights, we saw re-act productions of "Oklahoma," "Frankenstein" and "Once Upon a Time." "Oklahoma!" done in a theater (later a dance hall) and before it was refurbished with "min set covers, among other things) seemed as fresh as if it were opening.

Stayed at Sy Kahn's cottage but the City Hotel (1856) has a single room for $27.50 for a single room for $42.50 for a suite; all include continental break-fast in the hotel's upstairs parlor plus the loan of slippers and bath- robes to wear to it. The hotel has a French restaurant (I recommend the specialty: lamb loin stuffed with spin-ach, artichokes and broiled tomato) where dinner will run $10 a person. But for everyday, inexpensive eating, I endorse everything at the Columbia House Restaurant and the sandwiches and Coors Beer on draft (served in chilled schooners) at the J. B. "Jack" Douglass saloon.

On one of our four days in Columbia, Sy's son David lent us his squeaky-braked Toyota and we drove 80 miles to Yosemite National Park for a quick dip in Mirror Lake (which, thanks to drought and evolution, is becoming Mirror Meadow) and some upward gazing at Yosemite Falls (a thin trickle this year, but 10 times higher than Niagara). Our skippy five hours in Yosemite Valley were enough to make me promise myself a return visit on another trip.

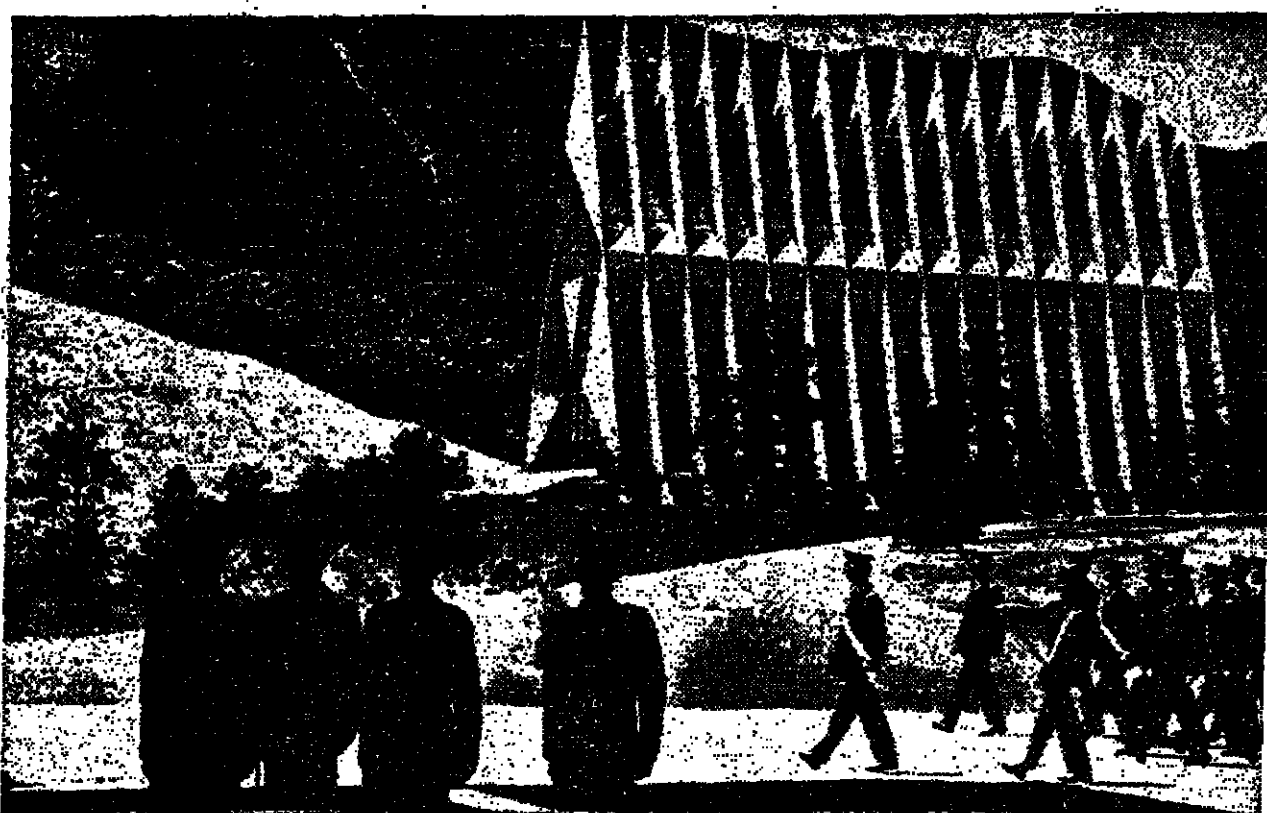

While at Yosemite we tried the ubiquitous Tourmobiles—mostly open-topped, some double-decked—that service a number of major destinations within the park free of charge. In the near-decade we've been away, these blue-and-white caterpillars have crawled across the landscapes of Washington, D.C., and Arlington National Cemetery, Yosemite and Sequoia National Parks and Universal City in Hollywood. They are a form of mass tourism that cuts down on the pollu- tion and other dangers attendant to rubberneck-gawking from autos. If they have one curse, it is their tenden- cy toward automating the people who run them and ride them, but in general the American Family Levy found the Tourmobile more blessing than blight.

Universal Studios are open to the public from 8 A.M. to 5 P.M. daily. The earlier you get there, the better. The lines can be enormous, although the people-moving operation would do credit to Disney (a World my kids out-grew after a 1974 visit to Florida). Even if you're at Universal City when the gates open, budget a full day for this high point of any trip to Greater Los Angeles. At $5.95 per adult, $4.95 for juniors (12-18), and $3.95 for children (5-11), the $20.80 we paid bought one of the best bargains in Bicentennial America.

We disembarked to visit the dress- ing room villas of Lucille Ball and Richard Arnez, Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton and Julie London. Then we moved from room to room of an indoor amphitheater for an enlightening cram course in moviemaking and make-believe. Older daughter Monica was cast in a three-minute filming of a runaway cable-car disaster where she and her fellow passengers emoted hysterically in air-conditioned comfort while a backdrop of San Francisco raced past them. We could have bought the film at a reasonable price, but then we would have had to invest in a projector.

Later, we rode past Uncle Tom's Cabin and the Munsters' home, both on Colonial Street; made a right turn onto Brownstone Street, past Muncie's Liquor from "The Sting" and the entrance to Baretta's office; then crossed a wooden bridge that started disinte- grating beneath us, but rebuilt and resurrected itself as we circled it on dry land. There was a rest and food stop at Prop Plaza.

The climactic segment of the tour saw us surviving such special effects as a flash flood in which a tree almost fell on us, but then straightened up and took a bow . . . and the parting of the Red Sea . . . and a stupendous avalanche opposite the hillside that, in "Spartacus," 1,500 "Roman sol- diers" from U.C.L.A. scaled its terraced shoes. Along the way, we were flagged down for (and allowed to watch) film- ing of a farewell episode of "Colum- bo." We didn't see Peter Falk, but we did see guest star William Shatner ("Star Trek") in a bathrobe.

At the end of the route an amuse- ment park offers four different shows you should see (at no extra charge) if you have the time. In order of merit, they are: "Aerial Actors," featuring Fred, the award-winning cockatoo from "Baretta" and his stunt-bird stand-in, Fred, Jr.; a funny demon- stration of their art by three stunt men; "Screen Test," in which a short film is cast and completed every hour; and the "1,000 Faces" make-up show, in which a pleasant young couple from Mendoza, Ill., were turned into "Frankenstein and Bride." Some consultant—from Central Europe, per- haps—ought to tell the people at Universal that Frankenstein was the scientist, not the monster.

The Washington Tourmobile conces- sion is necessarily, though not always, a more dignified operation than Uni- versal City's. Running at 10-to-20- minute intervals, the vehicles make 11 stops in downtown Washington, and you can get on and off at any or all of them. A ticket valid all day (9:30 to 4:30 during the summer season) costs $2.50 (half for children under 12). Or $3.50 if you combine it with connecting service to Arlington National Cemetery (open from 8 A.M. to 7 P.M. April through October, only till 5 P.M. after then). But you may find it hard, as we did, to do Washington and Arlington in one day. Arlington alone costs $1.25 (75 cents for chil- dren).

We boarded at the Washington Monument. Our first guide, Tom, was an outright hostile Boston Irishman. Snarling much too fast to be compre- hended, he listed the names of the sights we were passing without spec- ifying rights or lefts but called our at- tention to every illegally parked car along the route. After two stops of this, we disembarked, explored Capitol Hill, and joined a vehicle guided by Wanda, who was part, black and liv- ely. She was quick to tell us that "the Tidal Basin was engineered by a black man who later became Governor of the Virgin Islands," and the news (to us) that Thomas Jefferson invented the swivel chair and dumb-waiter and brought ice cream to America.

I had a moment of truth at the Lin- coln Memorial. In my New York boy- hood, I had been taken to Washington and my one memory is of Honest Abe, sitting up there 19 feet tall. To his right was the Gettysburg Address carved in marble. To his left, the Se- cond Inaugural Address ("with malice toward none, with charity for all"). And just below his right foot was a small sign that read: "No Roller Skat- ing." Do I have to tell you what my irresistible urge has been ever since? Think of the possibilities! We found a different notice there in 1976, how- ever: "No Food or Drink." The quality of forbidden fruit has become strained if not homogenized.

"My name is Hubert Humphrey and I'd be pleased as punch if you'd hold the handrail and face front," a record- ed voice requested as we rode the treadmill to anxiety: from arrival gate to baggage claim at Las Vegas Airport. Delivered well ahead of our luggage, we caught our first glimpse of a Las Vegas legend: two-armed passengers playing pairs of one-armed bandits at once. While my wife and I kept one eye on the luggage carousels, our daughters giggled and gawked at the gambling until a uniformed change girl pushed them away saying, "Minors must stand five feet back. State law!" Welcome to Las Vegas!

By that stage of our transcontinental odyssey—after two days in Chicago, five in Colorado and 16 in California—we were having trouble distinguishing the real from the unreal in America. Frankly, enjoying an avian at Uni- versal City and riding a treadmill through the trees to our $3 seats in the Hollywood Bowl for a Van Cliburn concert felt much more spectacular than living four days in a scrupu- lously preserved California Gold-Rush town (Columbia State Historic Park) or even visiting such awesome won- ders of nature as Yosemite and the Monterey Peninsula. In one day in Colorado, we'd enjoyed a morning snowfall in Rocky Mountain National Park and sweltered in 96-degree afternoon heat in Denver.

Our Bicentennial pilgrimage was rich in culture shock, the kind of jour- ney for which the expression "mind- boggling" was invented. But we did emerge with a scattering of insights and observations.

We found that Americans can be almost as provincial as Europeans. On the Fourth of July in Berwyn, Ill., my wife required medical help for an in- fected insect bite (and an allergic reac- tion to it) that she'd acquired in New York a day or two earlier. Our host drove us to MacNeal Memorial Hospi- tal's emergency room, where diagno- sis, treatment and an injection took 15 minutes. The receptionist asked where to send the bill for the good outpatient care and, when we told her our address in Vienna, she said some- thing we've cherished all the way home: "The computer wouldn't under- stand Austria."

On T.W.A. 173 from Denver to San Francisco, my seatmate—a long-haired young man wearing a T-shirt that said "Bertrand Russell Lives!" and reading a book called "Knowing Women" which "my ex gave me as a going- away present"—asked me if I came "from back East, too." I said: "Yes. Quite far east, in fact. We live in Aus- tria." "Oh, wow!" he said. "How'd you get there? . . . I sure do envy you." After a few minutes, he leaned over again and said: "Excuse me, but may I ask you a question? Just where is Austria? Is it somewhere in Europe?"

American geography-teaching has always struck me as even more shame- ful than the current trend away from language-teaching in the Jet Age, so I was not totally surprised. Even so, I was taken aback at Universal City, when we posed for some sepia nostal- gic photos and the photographer's wardrobe assistant struck up some chitchat while we waited: "You mean you've lived in Vienna for nine years?" "No, our first four years abroad were in Prague."

"Oh, I've heard it's a beautiful city. And the Swiss must be very easy to get along with."

We found that Americans are remarkably conservation-minded. Waste-baskets abounded in New York City. In Yosemite National Park, there were 17 depots that paid you a nickel for turning in each disposable beer or soft-drink can bought from a Park vending machine. (If we saw no litter in Yosemite, it may be because we could hardly see the forests for the small boys scrounging for cans.) Many of our hosts sorted their garbage for recycling.

(Incidentally, although our hosts were all middle class, and their homes ranged from rambling to immense, not one had full-time or even daily clean- ing help. Thus, every time my wife moaned about how she'd like to live in America as a working mother if language teachers weren't such drugg- on-the-market here, I would murmur the magic words "Grinshilde Baters- ma" and Valerie would subside, for that is the name of our devoted five-mornings-a-week Putzfrau in Vienna.)

From Golden Gate to Hell Gate, we also found a spirit of preservation abroad in the land. In Monterey, where the sardine factories are vanishing from Cannery Row, New Yorker car- toonist Edon Dedini and 19 other locals are chipping in $10 a month to keep the former lab of marine biolo- gist "Doc" (immortalized by Stein- beck) aloft as a private bottle club. In Monticello, N.Y., the four of us were delighted by a huge Mickey Mouse clock over a local business. When we admired it aloud, the taciturn driver of the blue school bus delivering us from the Concord Hotel to the Short Line depot opened up: "Fella who owns it got disgusted last time it broke. Put it up for auction. But local folk wouldn't let him sell it. Made him fix it instead." In New London, where two treasured antiques—the library and railroad station—have been res- cued, we came upon the wooden Hempsted House, dating back to 1678 and now a museum getting ready to celebrate its Tricentennial.

We discovered beauty in America where we least expected it. At the Air Force Academy near Colorado Springs, for example—a place we'd never have visited had our hosts not insisted. In a mountain setting heightened by dis- tant thunder and nearby lightning, its fantastic triple chapel is awesome enough to put the multidimensional fear of God into any mortal. The winged, soaring Protestant part up top—all steel and alvery with its stained- glass triangular windows and plush- lined pews—looks like a jumbo jet thrusting to soar into the wild blue yonder (though its pulpit looks more like a washing machine than a cock- pit) while the stony Catholic and circular Jewish chapels down below look like tank lounge and first class respect- ively. On the parade ground nearby, cadets were marching and, from the terrace, my children were fascinated by the human and inhuman aspects of incessant drilling. As for me, bemused by once-familiar commands of "hup-two-three-four" stooping off the Rockies, I noticed with a jolt of astonishment that the smallest cadet in one formation was walking with a wiggle. "Why, he's a shel!" I cried, which was how I became the first in my family to spot a new female cadet.

So much for man-and-woman-made beauty. In our Bicentennial summer were moments that only God or Nature could provide. I still see my children, holding hands, setting first feet in the Pacific Ocean at China Cove off Point Lobos, Calif. Or a sunset—like a shaft of pink champagne bubbling its way through stern Rockies—over Mary's Lake, Colo., giving the lie to anyone who's ever said "if you've seen one, you've seen them all." Or Grand Can- yon, nevermore to be "just a big hole in the ground," but a world of incom- prehensible majesty.

We enjoyed America enjoying herself in the Bicentennial. When we started our plane journey on the Fourth of July, our younger daughter was a mini- expatriate who thought the song she heard in her headset was called "I'm Esiza the Beautiful." Back in school in Vienna, Esiza is now an American who knows America is beautiful.

Getting in The Swim, Afloat

same tablemates you already know. Head, instead, for the buffet luncheon, where artful queuing up can lead to new acquaintanceships. You might also find it rewarding to become a more-or-less regular at the various lounges, nightclubs, late-night discos and midnight buffets. In the easy camaraderie of a cruise, someone is sure to invite you to join his or her party. After the first drink, though, pay your own way, or you might not be invited back.

Under no circumstances tie yourself down to a fixed deck chair, not even on those ships that still rent out permanently assigned seats. Use whichever chair suits your purpose of the moment; if someone claims it, make your apologies and move on.

Unattached singles traveling together should seriously consider investing in separate cabins. For one thing, roommates are not always as obliging as they might be about disappearing for an hour or two or three. Those who can't absorb the extra cost (about one and a half times the double rate) must learn to be resourceful about arranging private moments. Some stewards, if approached discreetly and tipped generously, will make unrented cabins temporarily available for romantic dalliance. Otherwise, it's off to the lifeboats, in the footsteps of all those headdresses in 30's movies who were always being dragged out from under the canvas in company with young ship's officers.

If you're not a V.I.P. and want to sit at the captain's table, you need a specialty. (Magicians do well.) Make your qualifications known to your travel agent, the maître d', the captain's steward or the purser.

Whether on the prom or not, singles should make friends with married couples. Most of them are inveterate matchmakers. And they're often generous with their hospitality, inviting singles to join them for before-dinner drinks or on shopping expeditions ashore.

Social life may be uppermost in the first-time cruiser's mind, but there are other areas of uncertainty. Some people, for example, swear by the sight-seeing tours sold through the shipping lines while others swear at them. One bears charges that they are at best unimaginative and at worst ripoffs aimed at steering the unsuspecting into tourist traps that provide kickbacks to cruise directors. Still, the tour guides are at least familiar with the ship's routine, know when the last tender leaves and whom to get in touch with should an emergency arise—no small asset in remote areas. And in many ports, tour guides who serve ships must qualify for their licenses by meeting certain standards of knowledgeability and conduct.

All of which is not to say that other taxi driver-guides are incompetent. Just make sure you understand each other beforehand about what's wanted and what the cost will be.

Driving about on your own in a rented car can be adventurous and fun, but frustrating if you get lost—and disheartening if you miss the boat because of a wrong turn.

Getting around as the locals do is economical, whether by bus, boat or bicycle. Do some homework beforehand, though, by writing to the tourist office involved (many have branches in this country, generally in New York City), or make a beeline for the official tourist information office as soon as you land and ask for guidance before wandering off on your own.

Perhaps the most debated aspect of a cruise is tipping. Certainly, when to tip can be as crucial as how much. People used to snicker when the uninitiated left money under the plate after each meal, but a New York travel agent still does it, varying her tips according to the quality of service at particular meals; she says it helps to keep the staff on its toes. A man I know achieves much the same result by distributing his largesse in two parts, the first half just before getting to the first port of call. "At least part of the crew gets shore leave, so they really appreciate the extra spending money. I explain what I'm doing, and they show their gratitude with little extra attentions during the rest of the cruise."

Some of the best cabin service I have ever had resulted from a generous tip a brother of mine slipped to my steward during the bon voyage festivities, with instructions to "look after my sister." Carlo's solicitous attentions included tip-toeing into my cabin during a middle-of-the-night storm at sea to close the porthole and keep the rain from pouring in.

Tipping is officially forbidden on some lines, but people who tip with them report that, on little something extra goes in terms of preferential treatment. When in doubt about tip, consult your travel agent or the helpful booklets or other related subjects our lines distribute to their passengers.

If you tip at the end of the night before the docking day, with hurried early luggage calls and the tared all over the ship's duties. Whenever it's done most properly offered in a (available in the writing room) There is general agreement the travelwise that $1.50 for dining room stewards and $1 for bus boys are acceptable daily averages. arts and bar waiters get a of the bill; the maître d' in room should be compensated for special services on a just-honored-for-me basis.

Travel agents say they queries about clothes from cruisers. The simple answer as you would at a store. There are one or two dress a voyage when women wear long gowns or party men dinner jackets of one another. No one dresses the out as a rule (presumably had a chance to unpack) last night (your bags may for crack-of-dawn pick-up) take sweaters as protective breezes, rubber-soled shoes for deck games, shoes for sightseeing and as insurance.

For all intents and purposes is no baggage limitation, as your favorite pillow if it make your cabin more is even a folding sleepboard the mattress won't be in. Those who like to read in consider bringing along bulky ships, like hotels, set sufficient brightness. And a soft or collapsible ashore excursions, to hold y suit, camera and sun cream

Some things should be a fore boarding or immediate after, like appointments in tings or cuts (everyone a tion the day of the capti or other gases), saunas an (facilities are limited a always a big demand after trips ashore) and special. The steamer baskets of are all but passé, but flow welcome bon voyage prese many, though—there are number of flat surfaces smaller cabins, if your fi to mark the occasion, eno to arrange gift orders t shipping lines (preferably week in advance) for suc champagne (imported b about $13.50 on up; dome wine (around $5 for rose finger sandwiches for your party ($5 worth is said i people) or bar credits (if they specify). Sharing the your tablemates is a nice paying hospitality (alert the least a meal earlier, so i properly chill the bottles the right kind of glasses).

Marriott introduces Barbados' west resort. It started back in 1820.

That was the year the infamous pirate, Sam Lord, built his castle on Barbados, the loveliest island in the Caribbean. Certainly the one with the friendliest people. Here his Georgian castle still stands, overlooking a magnificent beach. Surrounded by a manicured English garden, seventy acres of private grounds.

In all, a sumptuous estate that the Bajans wanted to share with their people. Along with their island and warm friendly ways. So they invited Marriott to come and turn Sam Lord's into a new resort; one of the most beautiful on Barbados.

Marriott left the castle the way it was, added a village of 200 deluxe guest rooms. And that's not all. Now there're 7 lighted tennis courts (all free), 7 pools (one especially for children), of course, the beautiful mile long beach. Nearby golf facilities can be enjoyed. As well as horseback riding, sailing, scuba and snorkeling. At Marriott's Barbados Resort, you can enjoy restaurants and lounges. Dancing music every night. Along with a breakfast center and duty-free shops. You see, when it comes to making you happy, our new resort and the Marriott makes it their business to make people happy. And the Bajans make it a way of life.

by Mrs. Hazel Walker, Tourist

"I'd like to see all these different countries again."

"Where should I go next time? That's been my first thought at the end of every tour Al and I have ever taken. But the 16-day Orient Enchantment Tour on Philippine Airlines was different. It only cost about $1200, and we were treated like the most important people in the Orient.

There are so many things I'd like to go back and see again. The bargain shopping in Manila was fantastic. And what food! We went to the special Gala Mahabay dinner in Manila with native entertainment and stuffed ourselves silly for 4 1/2 hours. I'll never forget it. Al's waistline hasn't forgotten it either.

I loved the Tiger Balm Garden in Singapore, and the temples in Bangkok and Hong Kong. Al kept saying, "Hazel, I never thought we'd see anything as beautiful as this." And believe me, Al's no romantic. The only thing I'm going to do different next time is stay for 21 days, so we'll also get to spend some time in Japan and Taiwan.

This all means that Al and I can't wait to take the Orient Enchantment Tour again. It also means that anybody who takes a tour can judge how good it is. All they have to do is ask themselves one simple question: Would they go back on it again?"

"My husband, Al, and I at the Tiger Balm Garden in Singapore."

WINTER CRUISES

Until a few years ago round-the-world cruises of up to 80 or 90 days were a staple of the passenger shipping industry. Now only three companies offer such cruises from East Coast ports. The future, it seems, belongs to the short cruise — those lasting no more than 13 days.

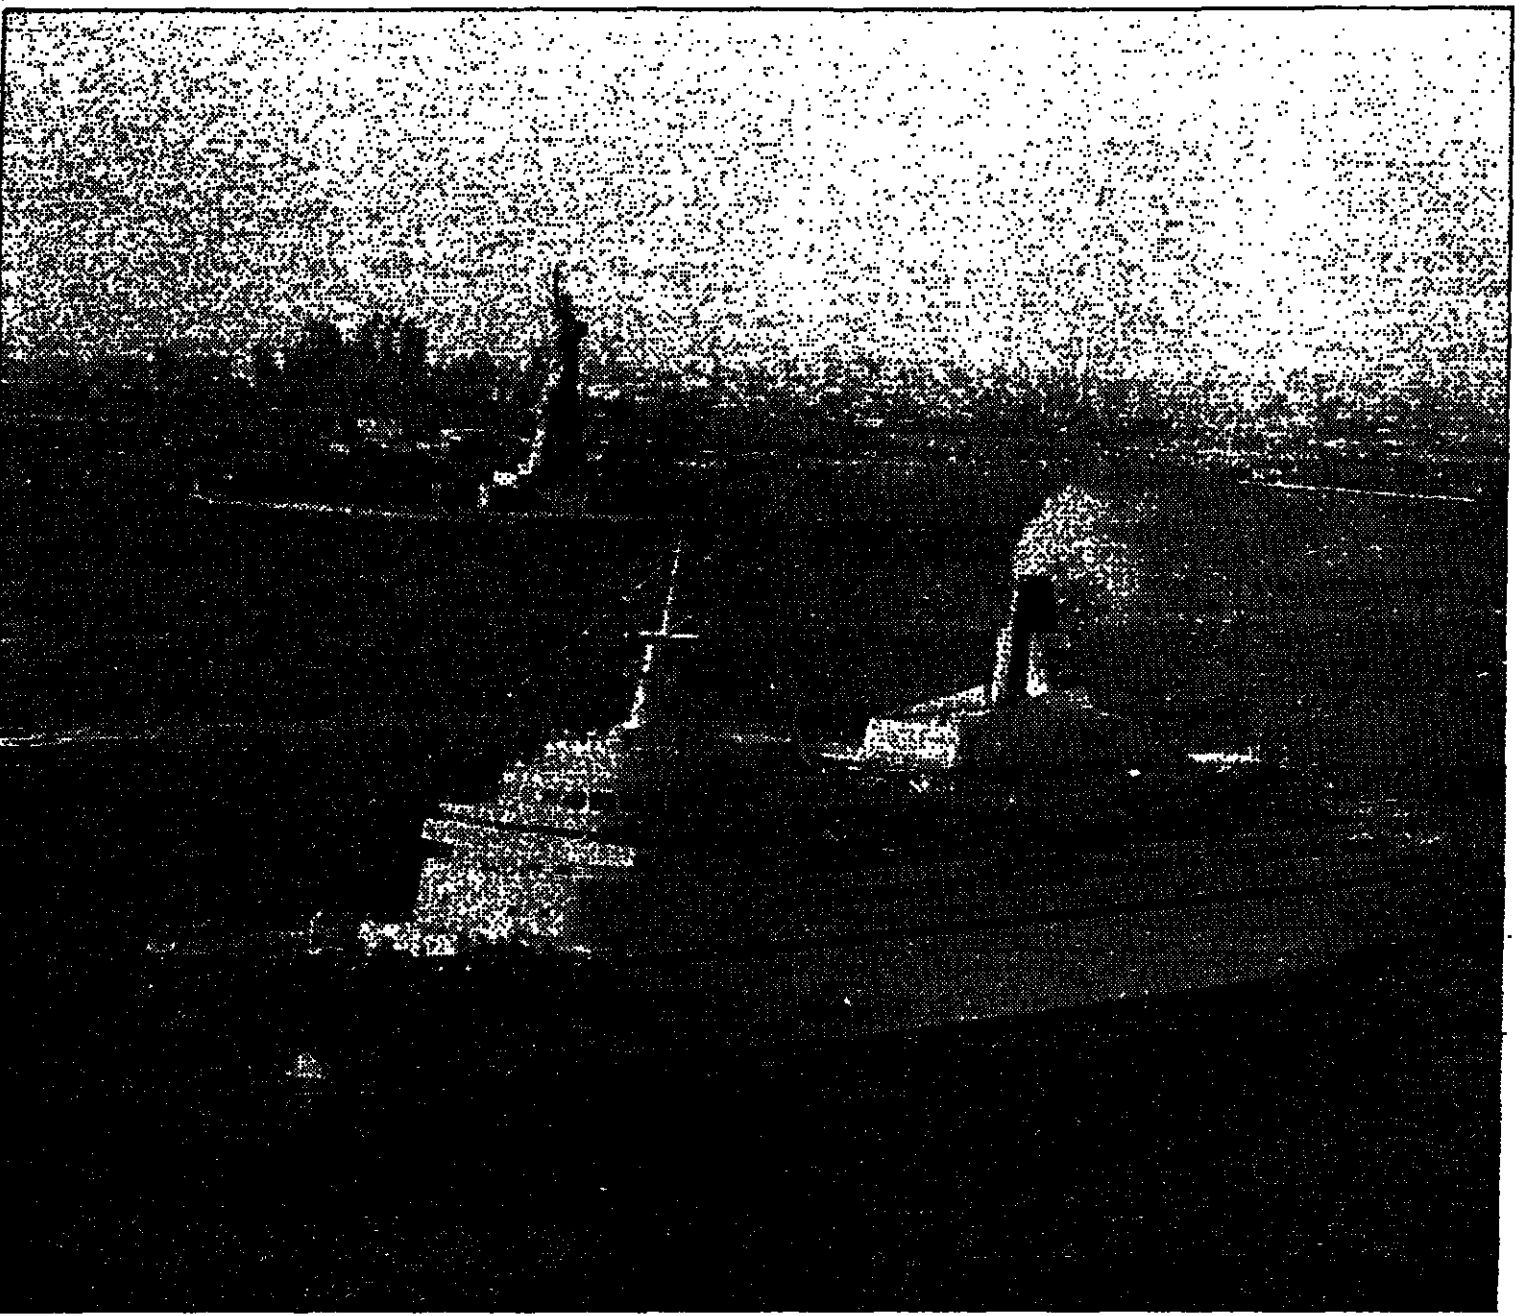

According to William J. Armstrong, manager of the Cruise Lines International Association, the change, ironically, "stems mainly from the fact that North American consumers now have more vacation days than ever before. "With more days, they are dividing their yearly allotment into short segments."

Cunard has two new ships designed especially for short cruises — the 17,500-ton Cunard Countess, launched in August, and the Cunard Princess, also 17,500 tons, which is scheduled to go into service in April. They are smaller than trans-Atlantic liners and thus able to dock in more ports, have only a single class of service, have toilet facilities and individually controlled air-conditioning in each stateroom, meeting rooms with movable seating facilities to accommodate shipboard conventions, extensive outdoor deck space and are envisioned as floating resorts for one- and two-week vacations.

The same pattern has been followed in the design of a number of other ships, among them such new vessels as the Sun Viking, the Nordic Prince and the Song of Norway of the Royal Caribbean Cruise Line, the Sun Princess of Princess Cruises and the Renaissance of Paquet Cruises, and the refitted Veendam of Holland America Cruises.

The cruise directory beginning on this page covers the three main East Coast ports: New York, Port Everglades (Fort Lauderdale, Fla.) and Miami. Sailings from various Caribbean ports are also listed as well as one sailing from Palm Beach, Fla. (Dec. 21, the Stella Solaris of Sun Line), the first cruise to leave from that port.

The information in this directory was supplied by the shipping companies themselves but does not include sailings under charter to outside firms. Dates, ports of call and fares are subject to change. Unless otherwise noted, rates are for one person in double occupancy; for cruises repeated at different times of the

3 CRUISES ON THE S.S. ROTTERDAM TO WARM YOUR BODY AS WELL AS YOUR SPIRITS FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

This winter during the holiday season, Holland America's world cruise ship, the s.s. Rotterdam, will be circling the world of the Caribbean from the West Indies to the East Indies. And being a world cruise ship, the s.s. Rotterdam is one of the most luxurious resorts you'll find on land or sea. Which means you'll enjoy all the comforts of home as well as the facilities and entertainment of an international resort.

Your vacation takes off the minute you board in New York. And as you vacation, ports like Jamaica, Aruba, Grenada, Caracas and Mexico's Cozumel come right up to you. There's no packing and unpacking, no checking in and out of hotels and no getting held up in holding patterns over airports. And no tipping required.

In between you can drive golf balls, shoot skeet, sunbathe and rest assured the lifeguard won't put you to sleep.

So make Holland America your home for the holidays and enjoy the experience of a cruise line that's been cruising the world for 103 years. Call your travel agent or check the coupon and mail it with your name and address to Holland America Cruises, 2 Penn Plaza, New York 10001. Or call (212) 760-3880. The s.s. Rotterdam is registered in the Netherlands Antilles.

If you'd like to take flight from winter this year, Holland America is offering free airfare to Miami with free transfers from the airport to your s.s. Statendam cruise. And there's no better way to cruise than on Holland America's s.s. Statendam.

Unlike the usual Florida cruise ships, the Statendam is a true luxury liner with plenty of room for you to luxuriate in. And only Holland America offers you a complete breakfast and lunch out by the pool or in the dining room daily. Plus a choice of mealtimes most convenient for you. And no tipping required.

What's more, the greatest vacation spots in the Caribbean will be within walking distance. You can have a look at the drive-in volcano on St. Lucia, swim in the underwater national park near St. Thomas, visit the year 976 on the San Blas Islands. Even have a look at South America's Andes from Caracas' Mt. Avila.

All with the elegant service and experience of a cruise line that began cruising the Caribbean before most cruise lines even began.

So when you compare fly and cruise vacations, make sure you compare the deal on the cruise as well as the deal on the flight. Call your travel agent or Holland America Cruises at (212) 760-3880. Or mail the coupon. The s.s. Statendam is registered in the Netherlands Antilles.

Get your Caribbean cruise off to a flying start.

Take off on a Royal Caribbean Air/Sea Cruise. Aboard Sun Viking or Nordic Prince—the two most popular two week cruise ships in the Caribbean.

You'll see eight of the Caribbean's most asked-to-see islands. Places like St. Thomas, Curacao and San Juan. Plus Caracas on the continent of South America.

You'll enjoy bathing by the seaside in a refreshing salt water pool. Almost an acre of deck under the gentle Caribbean sun. A dining room that's a Restaurant Francaise one night, an English Pub the next. Entertainment that changes everytime we entertain. (You'll never see the same act twice. Unless you give it an encore.) If you thirst for more, we have the top bar in the Caribbean: the Viking Crown Lounge—10 stories above the sea.

And a Royal Caribbean Air/Sea

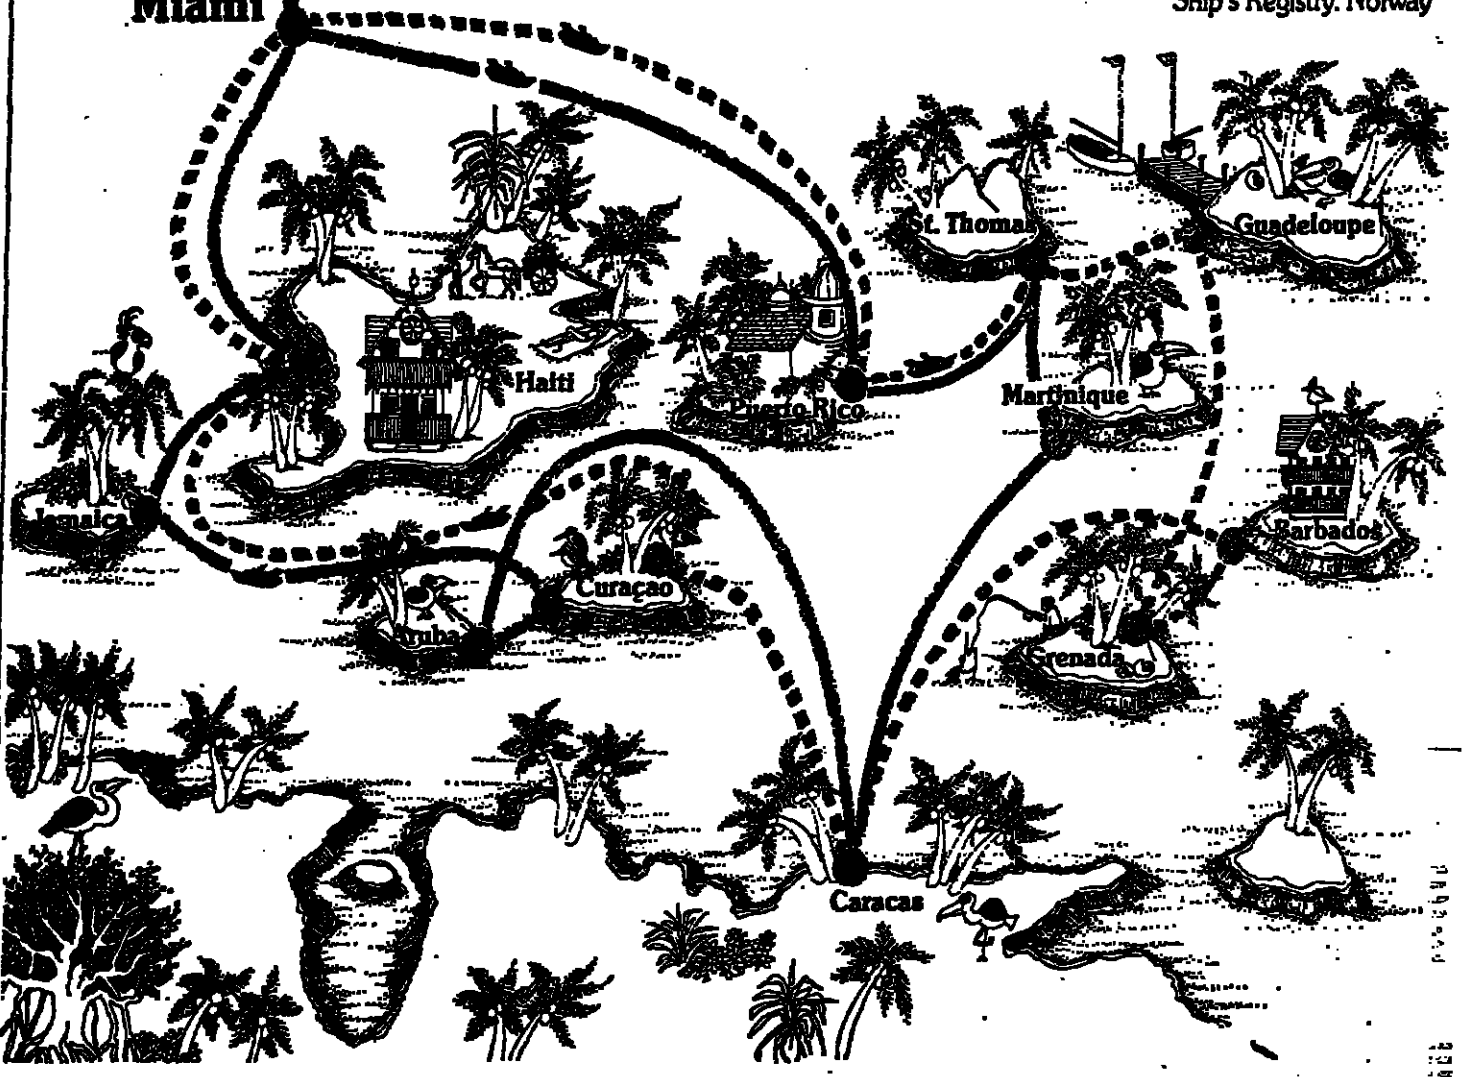

Cruise is one vacation where you can really unwind. Because you'll know what it's going to wind-up costing before you go. Where else, for example, does the cost of your vacation include the cost of all your food and entertainment? Fact is, our price includes a 14-day cruise, round-trip air fare to Miami, airline security charges, ground transportation in Miami, and all transportation and port taxes.

That's a lot of vacation for the money. So, see your travel agent. And tell 'em you want to take off for the Caribbean. On Sun Viking or Nordic Prince.

One of them sails every Saturday from Miami, year round. And we'd love to have you aboard.

WINTER CRUISES

A rare chance to enjoy a 12-day Gulf cruise—with all the comforts of a round-the-world vessel.

There is something special about the elegance of a round-the-world vessel. You sense it on no other ship. There is an uncrowded vastness to its decks and lounges. A comfortable spaciousness to its limited number of cabins. A deft, nimble graciousness to its seasoned crew.

Most people who take short cruises rarely experience the exhilarating pleasure of such a vessel. But this fall you can sample it to the full. For 12 glorious days. Aboard the Royal Viking Sea.

Before leaving on her third round-the-world cruise in January, 1977, the Sea will take two 12-day Gulf/Caribbean cruises. Here is your chance to combine the convenience of a short cruise with the luxury of a long cruise. Even people who have sailed these waters a dozen times before will find the experience extraordinary. It begins the moment you come aboard.

There are a mere 289 cabins, all First Class. 94% of all passengers enjoy sweeping, outside views. With fewer people aboard than ordinary short-cruise vessels, the 300-man crew has ample time to care for everyone.

The experience continues throughout the ship, thanks to a spaciousness that lets you live your days as actively or as quietly as you choose. There are deck games, and quiet out-of-the-way lounges. There is a swimming pool large enough for swimming, and decks quiet enough for dreaming. There is rousing evening entertainment, and deserted moonlit railings. The dining room, set high on an upper deck, is large enough to serve everyone at a single, relaxed seating. This freedom to vary your pace to match your moods is the hallmark of luxurious, lengthy cruising. The Sea expresses it beautifully.

Along the way you will visit Playa del Carmen and Cozumel, Mexico. Georgetown, Grand Cayman, Montego Bay, Jamaica. And Port-au-Prince, Haiti. Ports carefully chosen to offer you a variety of shore amusements: beach-strolling, sight-seeing, shopping.

If you are thinking of taking a short cruise this fall, here is a marvelous opportunity to take it with long-cruise luxury. Aboard the round-the-world Royal Viking Sea. Of Norwegian registry. And spirit.

Each cruise offers a choice of embarkation ports. The first departs Fort Lauderdale November 16, and New Orleans November 19. The second departs Fort Lauderdale November 29, and New Orleans December 2.

The new Cunard Countess. Can any other ship offer as much?

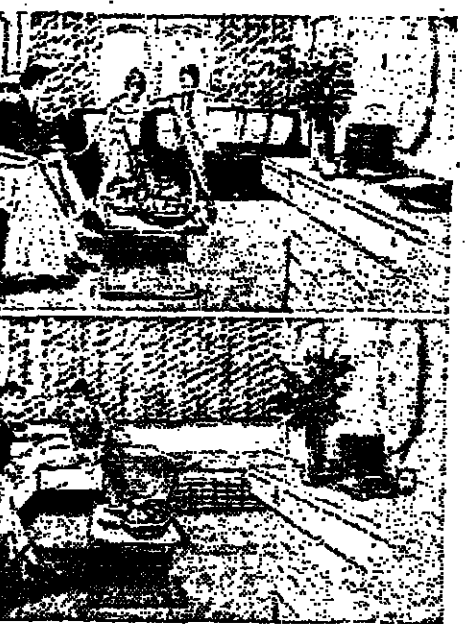

Can you find a newer ship for your Caribbean cruise?

she's brand-new, the Cunard Countess has exclusive no other popularly priced cruise ship can match. Her "suspended" decks which absorb noise and More and bigger public rooms. More open deck with a glamorous Lido/Pool area. Plus 4 bars, 3 casinos, cinema, sauna, shopping arcade and a restaurant in the sky. Not to mention "suites" for all.

Can you find another ship with staterooms designed for entertaining?

no ordinary staterooms. In seconds, each bed slips into its place in an upholstered couch. Suddenly, room is a living room and you're ready for entertaining. Like getting two rooms for the price of one.

Staterooms designed for entertaining. At the top is your stateroom by day. Below, the same stateroom by night.

Can you find a 7-day itinerary that offers ports including South America?

Countess has the best itinerary. You'll go all the way to South America with stops at Caracas (La Guaira), Grenada; Barbados; St. Lucia; St. Thomas; and no Miami-based one-week cruise offers as much.

Fly every Saturday direct from New York.

Can you find so much value for your dollar? Two "rooms" for the price of one. More outside cabins at a better price than comparable rooms on competitive ships. Even minimum-priced rooms are a special value. Best itinerary in the Caribbean. And service in the 136-year Cunard tradition. It all adds up.

This great value sails every Saturday from San Juan. Rates include round-trip jet air fare, four superb meals daily and all entertainment aboard, port taxes and transfer between San Juan airport and the ship. Fly/cruise rates are only $555-$920*. Per person, double occupancy. See your travel agent, call Cunard/GWV Travel, Inc. at (212) 983-2510 or mail the coupon below.

TWO WEEKS TO SPARE! You can leave the ship for a week at Cunard's lovely Hotel La Toc on St. Lucia or the Paradise Beach Hotel on Barbados. The Cunard Countess will pick you up the following week. Two-week fly/cruise/ resort package: $770-$1,010*. Per person, double occupancy. (Meals extra at resort.)

*Via Overseas National Airways, a U.S. certified supplemental air carrier; travel arranged by GWV Travel, Inc.

Let her carry you to the Cities of the Dawn

From New Orleans, jazziest city in America, sail to the lands of the ancient Mayans. Prowl through their long-abandoned temples. Try to solve their still undeciphered hieroglyphs. The Cities of the Dawn are exotic, exciting, and still nearly unexplored.

At Carras our job is making luxury more elegant. Our passengers are usually seasoned travelers. They can compare us with other cruise ships. And when you compare us, we shine.

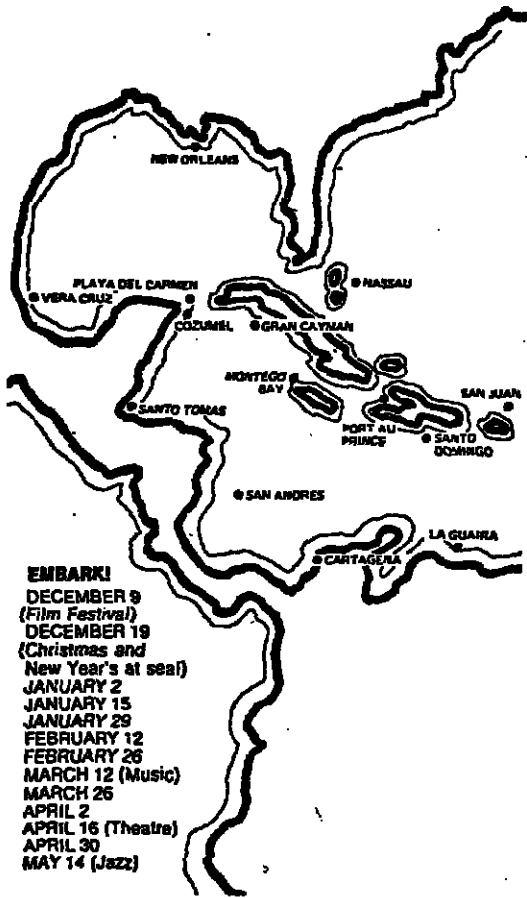

We carry fewer passengers. That means spacious cabins, each with a bathroom and a bathtub. Our dining room is large enough to accommodate all passengers at one sitting. Our cuisine is the envy of famous restaurants. And our decks, being less crowded, are delightfully strollable.

We've also added theme cruises: Sail with the Stars (for movie buffs); Symphony of Islands and Seas (a musical feast); The Sea a Stage (the play's the thing); Away from the Blues (and all that jazz!).

There's just one thing. We work very hard to find fascinating ports of call. But some of our passengers are so happy on board, it's hard to entice them ever to leave the ship!

Free round trip flight to New Orleans from any city in the continental U.S. or Canada provided by Carras for selected sailings.

dition to electricity and water, small sleeping rooms would be furnished with high-rise cots and a blanket, simple toilet and wash basin, and cost $3 to $5 per night, per person, nationwide. Travelers could service the beds with their own linens or rent them.

One of the greatest deterrents to travel nowadays is that the TV and swimming pool entrepreneurs foist upon the public a luxury sleeping facility when many tourists want a bed minus a lot of trimmings. The tax dollar built the roads and developed the parklands of America and the citizen should not be kept from enjoying travel because of the high cost of bedding down.

This is all the more important because the Congress, for the past few years, has been considering reduced fares for senior citizens. The Chairman of the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation, Congressman Robert E. Jones of Alabama, said in a recent letter to me: "In the 95th Congress the Committee will most likely examine the issue of reduced fares for the elderly." Along with this should come reduced hotel rates for senior citizens. LINA M. KELLER New York

WEEKEND PACKAGES

To the Editor: In the article "Weekend Packages: Manhattan for Sophisticates" (Travel Section, Sept. 12) the St. Moritz On-the-Park was not included. The St. Moritz presently offers a three-day,

BUS VACATIONS

To the Editor:

After reading the article, "The Boom in Mini-Vacations by Bus," by Paul Grimes (Travel Section, Sept. 18), I was astonished to find no mention of Biss Tours.

Our buses are new and immaculate. Every tour (even a one-day tour) is accompanied from beginning to end by trained and qualified tour directors.

During the course of our tours, the director serves refreshments, provides stereo music, conducts activities such as song sessions and bingo games and walks through the bus to answer individual questions about the tour. All hotels we use are conveniently located—generally in the heart of town. We depart from various locations in the city and go directly from these points to our destinations. We operate 12 months a year and program innovative tours in addition to perennial favorites. Readers can telephone our office at 212-582-6020 for a free brochure listing all of our tours.

To the Editor:

In the article by Paul Grimes on "The Boom in Mini-Vacations by Bus" there were two statements that were disturbing to me:

1. "Fine print in the Casser brochure has indicated that it would be appropriate to tip her (the guide)..."
2. "Then I gave Bill a tip ($1) as the brochure had indicated I should..."

Why should the brochure have indicated the necessity of a tip for the guide and for the bus driver? Aren't bus drivers paid a salary? Aren't guides paid a salary? Why should Mr. Grimes, who purchased for a fee the trip and associated tours and facilities, be "suggested" to give a tip?

DONALD M. KIRSCHENBAUM
Brooklyn
[Paul Grimes replies: Guides are indeed paid salaries, but tour operators claim that it isn't always easy to get qualified guides. Allowing them to accept tips, which most but not all operators do, is an added inducement.]

TOLEDO SYNAGOGUE

To the Editor:

Mary Louise Wilkinson's article, "Toledo: A Day Trip Misses the Best of It" (Travel Section, Sept. 26), started with a throwaway remark about the "Church" of Santa Maria la Blanca.

Santa Maria la Blanca was originally the "Great Synagogue" of the Toledo Jewish community. In the early 16th century it became a church for a few years when it acquired the name of Santa Maria la Blanca. Most recently, in the 1960's, it has been turned into a Museum on Spanish Jewry and is maintained by a special branch of the Spanish Ministry of Tourism for the preservation of the history of the Jews in Spain. The building itself is an interesting blend of the architecture of the different periods of its history.

BULGARIAN TRANSIT VISAS

To the Editor:

In reference to the letter (Travel Section, Sept. 12) on transit visas through Bulgaria, my own experience of last July should provide the last word on the subject.

My wife and I were planning to go by train from Frankfurt to Istanbul by way of Austria, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria. Prior to leaving New York, we attempted to obtain transit visas for the latter two countries from their respective agencies. Both told us there would be no problem at the border; we were further assured that a Bulgarian visa would cost "maybe less than $2 or $3." As it turned out, a Yugoslav visa valid for 30 days was issued at the border at no cost. The Bulgarian episode was something else again.

It was after 10 at night when we reached the border. Customs and/or immigration men boarded the train, asked for passports and then requested $11 each from my wife and me for transit visas. They spoke no English or French or German and we spoke no Bulgarian, but the visa was printed in French, listing in 14 different currencies the amount due per visa. I shelled out $22 of the small emergency amount I had in cash.

We crossed into Turkey about 6 A.M. So we didn't even have a day's view of the country. We didn't exchange any currency and thereby may have saved ourselves $5 each that we didn't know about. We did not disembark from the train at any time in Bulgaria but we still had to pay. Incidentally, our fellow non-American travelers in the compartment didn't have to pay. Perhaps they had been granted visas before leaving home, a courtesy we were denied in New York.

Our experience has been shared by others we have spoken to and the general attitude has been to put it mildly, a negative one. Part of the return trip, from Istanbul to Belgrade, was made by air, specifically to bypass Bulgaria.

BRITANNY COAST

To the Editor:

Herbert R. Lottman's "What's Doing Along the Brittany Coast" (Travel Section, Sept. 12) brought to mind our pleasant visit in that area in the spring of 1974. I should like to commend to travelers who include St. Malo in their itinerary the delightful Auberge de l'Hermine in the Place de l'Hermine, quite close to the railroad station. The meals are superb, notably on Fridays when the Sa Marmite Dieppoise is served, the likes of which we have found nowhere else. PAUL A. THOMAS Greencastle, Ind.

To the Editor:

Your article on the Brittany coast was superb, save that a mention of the Brittany ferries should have been made. They sail between St. Brittany, and Plymouth, England offer travelers a delightful alternative to the widely known CI crossings. The cost is low, the stable, modern and swift, an ambience is superb—classical French cuisine, reserved seating, appointed cabins and car carry. St. Louis THOMAS C. G.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

To the Editor:

In attempting to exchange (American Express) traveler's checks in Helsinki, Finland, I found a bank ($1) bank service charge to the bill. Astonished by the percent charge, I questioned the bank. It was told that the bank charges a minimum service fee of 4 marks, checks or less, of any denomination. When I immediately requested the bank to cash three more $20 for the 4 mark fee, they at first tested that this would be impossible since the paperwork had already been done; after further discussion, they agreed to re-write the papers, was no sign of other info. available in the bank informationists of this practice.

Further inquiry indicates a practice is quite common in ALEX E. FAIR

King-size bed, complete with castle. $19 a night for two.

Many of Spain's hotels overlook castles. And some actually are castles. Or monasteries or palaces that we call paradores where a luxurious room for two costs no more than $19.00, breakfast included. So if you've wanted to travel royally without paying a king's ransom, Spain is the place to do it. Many of our museums are housed in national landmarks as rich with history as the treasures displayed within them. Many of our towns and villages were feudal fiefdoms and look much the same as when lords and ladies lorded over them. And even today you can cross bridges Roman-Caesars built, wander through mosques the Moorish princes built, marvel at the royal residences our own monarchs built. Best thing is, you don't have to wait for summer. Most of Spain stays warm through winter. Your travel agent can tell you more. Or mail us the coupon.

M.S. Mermoz and M.S. Renaissance bring you the Paquet promise.

More than you dream for less than you think.

It's one thing to choose a cruise that will cost you very little for a week or two away from home.

It's another to select a cruise that will cost you very little more for a vacation that seems to be worth all the money in the world.

But that is precisely what Paquet French Cruises promises you. And the promise is the credo of two beautiful ships, M.S. Mermoz and M.S. Renaissance.

M.S. Mermoz is the picture of life and fun. M.S. Renaissance is the image of style and elegance. And they are not only registered in France, they are the only French cruise ships in the Western Hemisphere.

And what makes these two ships so irresistibly different is the spirit of France herself. So come savor and share the difference with someone you love this very winter—or next spring, at the very latest. Whichever ship you select, you'll discover a way of life that, until now, you've lived only in your dreams.

The wines will be complimentary. The cuisine will be French. The cabins will be colorful and cozy. The people will be warm and friendly. And the pleasures will be down-to-earth and dawn-to-dawn—from small café to Grand Salon, from Swedish sauna to French boutique, from cabaret to discothèque, from outdoor pools to cinemascope theater, and from Crêpes Suzette à la Paquet to breakfast-in-bed with croissants and café au lait.

To mention several additional blessings, all M.S. Mermoz cabins have two lower beds, all but five M.S. Renaissance cabins are outside, deck chairs and beach mats and terry robes are free of charge, and luncheon is served in three places—in the dining room or ever so informally in a café or by a pool.

And just think. You can let yourself go on anything from a 7-day Rendezvous with M.S. Mermoz to a 19-day Rendezvous with M.S. Renaissance.

THE M.S. MERMOZ RENDEZVOUS CRUISES Any Sunday from San Juan. With Inclusive Tour Charters direct from New York via Pan Am.

If, on the other hand, you plan to leave from another major gateway in either the U.S. or Canada, you can take advantage of economical Fly-and-Cruise arrangements.

As for the Rendezvous itself, you can take your choice of two 7-day itineraries.

M.S. Mermoz Rendezvous I will take you to Barbados, Trinidad, St. Vincent, Guadeloupe, and St. Thomas. Sailing December 19, January 2, 16, 30, February 13, 27, March 13, 27, April 10.
